tures of the Queen, the Prince and Princess, their children, and the King and Queen of Denmark. The other apartments would take too much space to describe beyond mere mention.

The drawing room, in which the prevailing tint is a delicate salmon, has a handsomely frescoed ceiling, some French mirrors, two or three exquisite groups of statuary, among them Mme. Jerichan's "Bathing Girls," almost hidden in a flower of cotton, and another of two charming children, also by Jerichan, on a marble pedestal.

Passing through the long hall-rooms to the conservatory, the latter is found stocked with a wealth of rare exotic, blossoming plants, all sorts of ferns and palms and graceful flowering vines. Then, leaving the residence, we walk once more, down the smooth paths, and turning to the left, come to the picturesque "Bachelor's Cottage" where, said the guide with a merry twinkle in his eye, as we viewed the innocent and dove-like looking interior, the house is full of guests, or too-crowded, the young gentlemen of the company sleep. Strutting on through paths of flowers and broad paths shaded by superb elms, the "kennel" comes into view, and on our appearance a most tremendous "yelp" issues from multitudinous dog throats, as the petted animals danced wildly about in their little front yards and bring the keeper from his cosy cottage near at hand.

Words of Wisdom.

It is weak and vicious people who cast the blame on fate. A weak mind sinks under prosperity as well as adversity.

When our hatred is violent, it sinks us even beneath those we hate. The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of women.

Ambition often plays the weather's trick of raising a man up, merely to fling him down. Worldly friendship is like our shadow; while we walk in the sunshine it sticks close to us, but the moment we enter the shade it deserts us.

The golden moments in the stream of life rush past us, and we see nothing but sand; the angels come to visit us and we only know them when they are gone.

Smiling is a virtue, but the sparkling are to wine, or scintillations to the diamond, intensifying its beauty and clothing it in all the superb hues of the rainbow.

Few nights are so dark that no stars are to be seen; the thing is too look them out, and keep on until you see them, and make the most of what light you are to be disappointed.

By love's delightful influence all the injuries of the world are alienated and but bitter cup of affliction is sweetness, the fragrant flowers are strewn along the most thorny path.

To give a man a full knowledge of true morality, I should need to send him to no other book than the New Testament.—John Locke.

Happy is he who has learned this one thing—to do the plain duty of the moment quickly and cheerfully, whatever it may be.

Most people would succeed in small things, if they were not troubled with great ambitions.

THE TERRORS OF CARVING.—The misery of habitual carving can hardly be exaggerated. The man who comes home tired from his day's work and sits down to dinner needs a quiet and easy meal. Instead of having this, he is compelled to undergo the labor of carving and to postpone his personal dinner until his appetite has vanished.

It is no small labor to carve for a family, say of six persons. The joints of the spring chicken are apparently made of a combination of steel and iron, and can neither be cut nor dragged apart, while the roast beef toughened by long years of service in its original shape of ox, requires more strength of wrist on the part of the carver, than would suffice to saw a tree's inch log. When at last the work of carving is done, the delicate and difficult duty of "helping" begins. There is no peace of mind for the man who helps his family and his occasional guests to any food except soup or oysters, both of which can be accurately and fairly divided. In the case of chicken he can never give satisfaction. There is no rule in this matter beyond that of giving the chicken legs to the boys, which can be followed. To ask people what part of the chicken they prefer is simply madness. Either everybody will tell the truth and demand the best cut, which case all but one will be gratified by falling to have their wishes granted, or everybody will reply, "Any part," "It makes no difference" or words to the same mendacious and aggravating effect. Of course, when the man who says "It makes no difference" is helped to anything but the breast, he becomes the enemy of the carver for life, and nothing can dislodge him of the impression that he has been wantonly insulted. It is far better to boldly help people without making any pretense of consulting their wishes. They will then regard the carver as a rude and careless host, but they will acquit him of any intention to press open insults on his guests.—New York Times.

Never!—Never answer questions in general company that have been put to you.

Never, when travelling abroad, be overboastful of your own country.

Never lend an article you have borrowed, unless you have permission to do so.

Never attempt to draw the attention of the company upon yourself.

Never exhibit anger or impatience, or excitement, when an accident happens.

Never pass between two persons who are talking together, without an apology.

Never enter a room loudly.

Never fail to close the door after you, if you found it closed, and never allow it to be open.

Never forget that if you are faithful in a few things, you may be ruler over many.

LET GIRLS LEARN.—To be pure in mind and heart. To be modest in demeanor. To be helpful and kind.

To be helpful and kind. To be helpful and kind. To be helpful and kind.

To be helpful and kind. To be helpful and kind. To be helpful and kind.
