In supply the fisheries service estimates came up. Mr. Davies quoted official reports and statements made by Sapt. Scott showing that nearly all the vessels boarded by the fisheries cruisers were in harbor, It would have been better had the vessels tried to keep American fishermen outside the three mile limit. He quoted statements of leading Conservatives and Conservative papers showing that American schooners were not kept outside the limit. The captains of fisheries cruisers seemed more anxious to see that the customs regulations were observed than they were
