These estimates show a total increase of 21 members and a total loss of 8 members, making a net increase of 23, which being added to 221, the present number of members in the House of Commons, gives the new total of 234. Saskatchewan by about 37 per cent.; and those of Alberta and British Columbia, each, by about 42 per cent.

But when we come to the other four Provinces the revolution is the other way about. Ontario is slated to lose 3 out of 86—a loss of about 3½ per cent.—no very serious matter. But with the Maritime Provinces it is a different story. Nova Scotia is slated to lose 2 members out of 18, or about 11 per cent.; New Brunswick 2 members out of 13, or about 16 per cent.; and Prince Edward Island one member out of 4, or just 25 per cent.! This thing is certainly becoming serious—so serious that it must be stopped.

must be stopped.

At Confederation Nova Scotia was granted a representation of 19. Subsequently it rose to 21. Then it declined to 18, at which number it how stands. But a further reduction to 16 is more than the Province can bear.

New Brunswick had 15 members. That was reduced the present 13; and now some hold it must be reduced 11. There is no such "must."

The case of Prince Edward Island is the most glaring of all. The Island fought against Confederation for nine years, from the first conference in Charlottetown in 1864 through the Quebec Conference, and on to 1873, when it came into the Union only because the Dominion Government gave up the principle of "representation by population," and granted the Island the representation of si ion," and granted the Island the representation of six members—the number for which Islanders had held out and successfully held out, for nine years.
