The saloon is so suspended in the middle of the sip that it can be moved about a hortanitax is paraticle with the keel. The motion is governed by a hydraulic apparatus, and is controlled by one man, whose duty it is to keep the saloon—which is 70 feet long by 35 wide and 20 high—all ways in a line with a spirit level, so that the results of the pitching and rolling will be reduced to a minimum. Care has also been taken to overcome the tremul ous motion incident to the working of the engines and the shock of the waves against the sides. This is done by resting the supports of the saloon on massive beds of India rubber, and rendering impossible the transmittal of viberatory moetion from the ship to the saleon.
