

The citizens of Brantford are to be congratulated upon the arrangements made for the observance of this centennial anniversary. / All progress is the result of some form of pioneering effort. It is well that succeeding generations of Canadians should be taught to venerate and to perpetuate the memory of those whose vision and wisdom have given to Canada the enviable place our country enjoys in the world of today.

It is fitting that the greetings of the Government of Canada on this occasion should be conveyed in person by the Minister of the Crown who holds the portfolio of Minister of Transport, with which all agencies of communication are so closely related. It affords me, therefore, a special pleasure to ask my colleague, the Honourable Lionel Chevrier, to speak to you on my behalf, and on behalf of the people of Canada.
