

and willing, to act as monitors in rotation. Extra instruction, and, occasionally, school-books and paper, are given to the pupils who act as class-monitors.

Besides the instruction given to the children by the class-monitors and pupil-teachers, each class receives at least one lesson in the day from the head, or second teacher. They also, in large drafts or divisions, receive Simultaneous instruction, once a day, in the classroom, or gallery, from the pupil-teachers or masters.

This, which may be called the MIXED system, combines the advantages of the Monitorial and Simultaneous methods of instruction. Under the former, the children are taught almost, if not altogether, by monitors; under the latter, as the master cannot divide himself, the children, even in schools of the smallest class, idle away half their time under the name of preparing their lessons. But, under the mixed system, every pupil is kept constantly at work, and every minute is turned to account; for, if not under the direct teaching of the masters, he is receiving instruction from intelligent monitors.

The head teacher examines all the divisions in rotation, and makes an entry in his note-book of the state and proficiency of each. The second master is expected to do the same, and to communicate to the head teacher the result of his examination.

The head teacher has the general superintendence of all the schools, class-rooms, and galleries, except when teaching or examining a class; in which case he deposes the second teacher to take his place. When the head teacher resumes the superintendence, the second teacher continues to examine the several classes in rotation.

The teachers are expected to observe themselves, and to impress upon the minds of their pupils, the great rule of REGULARITY and ORDER. "A time and a place for every thing, and every thing in its proper time and place."

ORDER OF THE DAY.

AT nine o'clock every morning, the masters and monitors are expected to attend; the former to give, and the latter to receive, special instruction. If any of the teachers, or paid monitors, are absent or late, the head teacher enters their names in a book for the inspection of the Professors, and Commissioners, if necessary.
