A PEACH OF AN ESSAY

(By Peter McArthur)

Did you ever notice that when we want to praise anything with unusual emphasis we call it something else? For instance, if we wish to praise a the most precious thing that we can possess-the only concrete example of 'infinite riches in little room. be a gem a thing must have the finest natural qualities, enriched and per fected by art, and when we say that a thing is a gem we mean that it is the perfection of its kind, a finished product about which no further or igher praise is possible.

But calling a thing a "gem" is only one metaphor. There are many others, but in all cases the word we in the thing we name in its stead are perfect, for only the perfect things are used as metaphors. fections may vary but in every case a perfection is indicated.

Among our fruits there are two that are used as metaphors oftener than any other and by that fact we may judge of their surpassing quality. One is used in public life and the other in everyday life. In public life the man who secures a high position, This suggests that he has got some thing that all men earnestly desire something so packed full of richness and all goodness that it can only be described by calling it a plum—the fruit of which a celebrated horticulturist, E. And the plums, when they are ripe are entirely worthy of the high regard they receive from housewives as wel as politicians. Our other metaphorical fruit is the peach. Just listen to some youth saying of a beautiful girl that "She is a peach" and even if you had never tasted a peach you would know that it must be sweet, beautiful and ex-quisite, just as we all know that it is. The peach is the one thing that we can use without offence as a metaphor for a beautiful girl and there is nothing more alluring and perfect that we can use as a metaphor for a peach. To say that a peach is a peach is the highest praise we can bestow on i Duties—Six months' residence in each of three years after earning homestead pattent; also 50 acres extra cultivation.
