The Pauper Tribe.

Scientific American.

The difference between poverty and pauperism, though wide as the world, is often overlooked. The best of men may become poor; may honorably reach the point of actual destitution; indeed, it has not unrequently happened that the world's best benefactors have experienced extreme poverty, sometimes by resolut ly pursuing the course which has ultimately brought them to the highest financial and industrial as well as moral success. No combination of circumstances, bowever, no matter how disastrous, could make such men paupers. The pauper is made of very different material; he is what he is too often by preference, very often by inheritance.

Last year Dr. Hoyt, Secretary of the New York State Board of Charities, visited sixty-four poorhouses, containing 13,000 public paupers. Less than one fourth were of American parentage. In fifty-five cases investigated the pauperism extended to the second generation on the father's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the mother's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the father's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the father's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third generation on the father's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third gen generation on the father's side, and in ninety-two cases to the third is generation on the mother's side. Three hundred and ninety-seven had pauper fathers; one thousand three hundred and sixty-one had pauper mothers; and so on. Their pauperism was hereditary. The close relation of criminality with interest pauperism—the more forces ful members of such families perfersion to seize what they want rather than beg for it—is shown in history of the well known "Jukes" family, which, in one hundred and fifty which, in one hundred and fifty years, furnished this State with eight hundred and thirty criminals of baser types, besides many imbe-ciles, lunatics, and other undesirable of baser types, besides many imbeciles, linatics, and other undesirable characters.

Professor Brewer, who has given much study to the papper and tramp, problem, is confident that wherever the genesis of pappers is thus looked into there will be tound abundant evidence of a papper tribe well established among us, and perpetuating its instincts in its descendants. For this class no mawkish sentimentality will answer; they need strict justice. The class as a class must be rooted out by resolute treatment. The chain of criminal entailment must somehow be broken in them or they will breed a moral pestilence. Against such outlaws, "for whom," as a contemporary has said, "childhood has no sanctity, hospitality no safeguard, and property no rights," only vigorous measures will suffice. There is enough of honest poverty, through flood and fire and sickness, to furnish occupation to the charitable without the burden of voluntary papers, the effect of which is too often to seed the hearts of the sympathetic against all poverty and distress. The honest seeker for employment is confounded with the professional tramps, of whom the most charitable of communities are becoming heartily sick. In justice, to the deserving poor—and there is always a large class which, through no fault of their own, may become poor—the papper tribe should at least a content of the charitable of communities are becoming heartily sick. In justice, to the deserving poor—and there is always a large class which, through no fault of their own, may become poor—the papper tribe should at least a proposal and poor—the papper tribe should at least a paper tribe should at lea always a large class which, through no fault of their own, may become poor—the pauper tribe should at least receive no encouragement.

For many years in this country the single fact that a person in need of food or clothing or shelter was held to be a valid reason for giving what was asked. The country became in consequence a perfect paradise for the pauper tribe. They fared so well that multitudes brought thy adverse circumstances to poverty.

by adverse circumstances to poverty were tempted over the line into pauperism; and many others lingcred on the verge, passing their time between unwilling labor, pauperism, and petty cruminality. Out of these has grown a class of criminal vagrants, now by far the worst disturbers of the public peace and the public moral health.

Indeed, the Indian problem, bad as it is, is a triffe compared with that arising from the existence of the pauper tribe. The Indian is on the frontier: the vicious tramp is everywhere. And it is safe to say that, year oy year, the life and property destroyed by the tramp tribe exceeds that due to Indian depredations. If we are justified in spending millions in Indian wars, in placing upon reservations and trying to civilize the one class of savages, much more justifiable must be the taking of measures, national in scope and mangitude, to control, and reclaim if possible the other.

he continued the content of savages, much more justifiable must be the taking of measures, national in scope and magnitude, to control and reclaim if possible the other. Nothing short of this, we fear, will ever rid us of the pest.

A Word to Young Men.—One of the meanest things a young man can do, and it is not an uncommon occurrence, is to monopolize the time and attention of a young lady for a year or more without any definite object, and to the exclusion of any other gentleman, who, supposing him to have matrimonial intentions, abent themselves from her society. It prevents the reception of eligible offers of marriage, and fastens upon the young lady, when the acquaint, ance is finally disolved, the unenviable and unmerited appellation of "firit." Let all-your dealings with women, young men, be frank, honeat and noble. That many whose education and position in like manner would warrant our looking for better things are culpably criminal on these points, are no excuse for shortcomings. That woman is often injured or wronged through the holiest feelings, adds but a deeper dye to your meanness. One roll is always safe.
