They were marched to bull pens in June, July 20, 1903, to correct irregularities up to his agreement. He insisted that some of his men had not been given their former places. Governor Peabody's commission, which seems to have been fair, decided against President Moyer and looked upon his contention as trivial in view of the distressing consequences of a resumption of the strike.

The Federation "Kicks Over" the mill men themselves, a great majority of whom bitterly resented the subsequent interference of the Western Federation leaders. In the end to make this strike effective the miners in all the mines in the Cripple Creek district which were shipping ore to the United States Reduction and Refining Company mills were called out. Ninety per cent of the Cripple Creek miners were opposed to the strike. A committee was selected by them to confer with a like committee at Colorado City, with power to act; but the miners had no idea that they would be again called out. When this committee was selected it was discovered that they were all men close to the head offices of the Western Federation. Some of the miners thought they had been tricked.

The strike at Cripple Creek was declared August 10, 1903. Many of the mine-owners had contracts which they were not to strip their plants of the United States Reduction and Refining Company, and they had no option left but to ship their ore to this concern. A shut-down for any great length of time meant for some of them financial embarrassment, and the real motive threatened ultimately the loss of their properties.
