CHAPTER XIV.

Madam Conway's Disasters.

"To Worcester! For what?" asked Maggie, and the excited woman answered, "To stop it. To forbid the bans. I should think you'd ask for what?"

"To stop it," repeated Maggie. "I'd like to see you stop it, when they've been married two months!"

"So they have, so they have!" said Madam Conway, wringing her hands in her despair, and crying out, "That a Conway should be so disgraced! What shall I do? What shall I do?"

"Make the best of it, of course," answered Maggie. "I don't see as George is any worse for his parentage. He is evidently greatly respected in Worcester, where his family are undoubtedly known. He is educated and refined, if they are not. Theo loves him and that is sufficient, unless I add that he has money."

"But not as much as I supposed," moaned Madam Conway. "Theo told me $200,000, but that woman said one Oh, what will become of me? Give me the hartsorn, Maggie. I feel so faint!"

The hartsorn was handed her, but it could not quiet her distress. Her family pride was sorely wounded, and had Theo been dead, she would have hardly felt worse than she did.

"How will she bear it when it comes to her knowledge, as it necessarily must? It will kill her, I know," she exclaimed, after Maggie had exhausted all her powers of reasoning in vain; then, as she remembered the woman's avowed intention of visiting her daughter-in-law on the morrow, she felt that she must turn back; she must see Theo and break it to her.

"A BROKEN-DOWN SYSTEM. This is a condition (or disease) to which doctors give many names, but which few of them really understand. It is simply weakness—a break-down of the vital forces that sustain the system. No matter what may be its cause (for they are almost numberless), its symptoms are much the same: the most prominent being, sleeplessness, loss of appetite or weariness, depression of spirits and want of energy for all the ordinary affairs of life. None of these is absolutely essential in all such cases as is generally supposed."

"VITAL STRENGTH & ENERGY TO throw off these morbid feelings, and experience those that as night succeeds the day this may be more certainly secured by a course of the celebrated life-reviving tonic."

"THERAPION No. 3 than by any other known combination. So surely as it is taken in accordance with the printed directions accompanying it, will the shattered health be restored."

"THE EXPIRING LAMP OF LIFE LIGHTED UP AFRESH, and a new vitality imparted in place of what had so lately seemed worn-out, 'used up,' and worthless. This wonderful medicine is purely vegetable and non-toxic, is agreeable to the taste—suitable for all constitutions and conditions, in either sex; and it is difficult to imagine a case of disease or derangement, whose main features are those of debility, that will not be speedily and permanently benefited by this ever-renewing, restorative essence, which is destined to cast into oblivion everything that had preceded it for this widespread and numerous class of human ailments."

"THERAPION is sold by the principal Chemists throughout the world. Price in England, 2/6 and 4/6. Purchasers should see that the word 'THERAPION' appears on British Government stamps in every package in order of His Majesty's Hon. Commissioners and without which it is a forgery."

"Therapion may now also be obtained in Druggery (Trustees) 27/11."

gently, or "the first sight of that odious creature, claiming her for a daughter, might be of incalculable injury."

"Stop, Mike," she was about to say; but ere the words passed her lips she reflected that to take Maggie back to Worcester was to throw her again in Henry Warner's way, and this she could not do. There was then but one alternative. She could stop at the Charlton depot, not far distant, and wait for the downward train, while Mike drove Maggie home, and this she resolved to do. Mike was accordingly bidden to take her at once to the depot, which he did, while she explained to Maggie her reason for returning.

"Theo is much better alone, and George will not thank you for interfering," said Maggie, not at all pleased with her grandmother's proceedings.

But the old lady was determined. "It was her duty," she said, "to stand by Theo in trouble, and if a visit from that horrid creature wasn't trouble, she could not well define it."

"When will you come home?" asked Maggie.

"Not before to-morrow night. Now I have undertaken the matter, I intend to see it through," said Madam Conway, referring to the expected visit of Mrs. Douglas.

But Mike did not thus understand it, and thinking her only object in turning back was "to see the doin's," as he designated the "Firemen's muster," he muttered long and loud about "being thus sent home, while his madam went to see the fun."

In the meantime, on a hard settee, at a rather uncomfortable depot, Madam Conway awaited the arrival of the train, which came at last, and in a short time she found herself again in Worcester. Once in a carriage and on her way to the "Day State," she began to feel a little nervous, half-wishing she had followed Maggie's advice, and left Theo alone. But it could not now be helped, and while trying to think what she should say to her astonished granddaughter, she was set down at the door of the hotel, slightly bewildered and a good deal perplexed, a feeling which was by no means diminished when she learned that Mr. and Mrs. Douglas were both out of town.

"Where have they gone, and when will they return?" she gasped, untying her bonnet strings, for an easier respiration.

To these queries the clerk replied that he believed Mr. Douglas had gone to Boston on business; that he might be at home that night; at all events, he would probably return in the morning; she could find Mr. Warner, who would tell her about it. "Shall I send for him?" he continued, as he saw the scowl upon her face.

"Certainly not," she answered, and taking the key, which had been left in her charge, she repaired to Theo's rooms, and sinking into an easy chair, fanned herself furiously, wondering if they would return that night, and what they would say when they found her there. "But I don't care," she continued, speaking aloud and shaking her head very decidedly at the excited woman whose image was reflected by the mirror opposite, and who shook her head as decidedly in return! "George Douglas had deceived us shamefully, and I'll tell him so, too. I wish he came this minute!"

But George Douglas knew well what he was doing. Very gradually was he imparting to Theo a knowledge of his parents, and Theo, who really loved her husband, was learning to prize him for himself and not for his family. Feeling certain that the firemen's muster would bring his mother to town, and knowing that Theo was not yet prepared to see her, he was greatly relieved at Madam Conway's sudden departure, and had himself purposely left home, with the intention of staying away until Friday night. This, however, Madam Conway did not know, and very silently she awaited his coming, until the lateness of the hour precluded the possibility of his arrival, and she retired to bed, but not to sleep, for the city was full of firemen, and one company, failing of finding lodgings elsewhere, had taken refuge in an empty carriage shop near by. The hard, bar floor was not the most comfortable bed imaginable, and, preferring the bright moonlight and open air, they made the night hideous with their noisy shouts, which the watchman tried in vain to hush. To sleep in that neighborhood was impossible, and all night long Madam Conway vibrated between her bed and the window, from which latter point she frowned wrathfully down upon the red coats below, who, scoffing alike at law and order as dispensed by the police, kept up their noisy revel, shouting lustily for "Chelsea, No. 4," and "Washington, No. 2," until the dawn of day.

"I wish to mercy I'd gone home!" sighed Madam Conway, as weak and faint she crept down to the breakfast table, doing but little justice to anything, and returning to her room pale, haggard and weary.

Ere long, however, she became interested in watching the crowds of people, who at an early hour filled the streets, and when as the different fire companies of the State paraded the town in a seemingly never-ending procession, she forgot in a measure her trouble, and drawing her chair to the window, sat down to enjoy the brilliant scene, involuntarily nodding her head to the stirring music, as troop after troop passed by. Up and down the street, as far as the eye could reach, the sidewalks were crowded with men, women and children, all eager to see the sight. There were people from the city and people from the country, the latter of whom, having anticipated the day for weeks a month, were now unquestionably enjoying it.

Conspicuous among these was a middle-aged woman, who elicited remarks from all who beheld her, both from the peculiarity of her dress and the huge blue cotton umbrella she persisted in hoisting, to the great annoyance of those in whose faces it was thrust, and who forgot in a measure their vexation when they read the novel device it bore. Like many other people who can sympathize with the good woman, she was always losing her umbrella, and at last, in self-defense, had embroidered upon the blue in letters of white: "Steal me not, for fear of shame. For here you see my owner's name."

"CHARITY DOUGLAS."

As the lettering was small and not very distinct, it required a close observation to decipher it; but the plan was a successful one, nevertheless, and for four long years the blue umbrella had done good service to its mistress, shielding her alike from sunshine and from storm, and now in the crowded city it performed a double part, preventing its nearest neighbors from seeing, while at the same time it kept the dust from settling on the thick green veil and leghorn bonnet of its owner. At Betsy Jane's suggestion she wore a hoop to-day on Theo's account, and that she was painfully conscious of the fact was proved by the many anxious glances she cast at her chocolate colored muslin, through the thin folds of which it was plainly visible.

"I wish I had left the pesky thing to hum," she thought, feeling greatly relieved when at last, as the crowd became greater, it was broken in several places and ceased to do its duty.

From her seat near the window Madam Conway caught sight of the umbrella as it swayed up and down amid the multitude, but she had no suspicion that she who bore it thus aloft had even a better right to sit where she was sitting. In her excitement she had forgotten Mrs. Douglas's intended visit, to prepare Theo for which she had returned to Worcester, but it came to her at length, when, as the last fire company passed, the blue umbrella was closed, and the leghorn bonnet turned in the direction of the hotel. There was no mistaking the broad, good-humored face which looked so eagerly up at "George's widow," and involuntarily Madam Conway glanced under the bed with the view of being "thief for refuge."

"What shall I do?" she cried, as she heard the umbrella go the way "I'll lock her out," she continued; and in an instant the key was in her pocket, while, trembling in every limb, she awaited the result.

Nearer and nearer the factotum came; there was a knock upon the door, succeeded by a louder one, and then, as both these failed to elicit a response, the handle of the umbrella was vigorously applied. But all in vain, and Madam Conway heard the discomfited outsider say "They told me Theodosy's grandmarm was here, but I guess she's in the street. I'll come again to-morrow," and Mrs. Douglas senior walked disconsolately down the stairs, while Madam Conway thought it doubtful whether she rained access to the room that day, or as often as she might.

Not long after the gong sounded for dinner, and unlocking the door, Madam Conway was about descending to the dining-room when the thought burst upon her, "What if she should be at the table? It is just her!"

Very little if any gardening is begun yet, although occasionally we see a little sign, for instance a man with a plough in his cart. It is said that still greater interest will be manifested in agriculture here this summer, people being encouraged to this by the good prices ruling for vegetables last fall and during the winter.

People living on Carbonar Road have been a little agitated lately about mysterious lights that are seen flitting along at a late hour of the night. It is on Sunday nights that the lights are mostly in evidence. There is a difference of opinion as to what is the cause. Some say it is a Jack-in-the-burn, while others contend it is something more than a magic lantern. All we intend to say on the matter is that it is quite natural, and nothing to be wondered at either here or at our sister town—Carbonar.
