Recruiting in Canada and Newfoundland.

By a coincidence, we have before us at the same time two papers which furnish matter for an interesting comparison. One is a pamphlet entitled "Canada and National Service," the other the report of Mr. Blackall to the Recruiting Committee of the campaign recently conducted on the South and West Coasts by himself and his assistant recruiters.
Our attention should be particularly directed to Canada at this moment, when she is adding to the tale of past heroism further brilliant achievements, bought at the price of further sad losses. As Verdun and the French, so Ypres and the Canadians will be forever associated. This pamphlet, which we can only notice generally here, is, briefly, a memorial recently addressed to Sir Robert Borden by representatives of all parts of the Dominion, urging upon him the necessity of reforming the existing system of recruiting. Canada has pledged herself to raise half a million soldiers. Already more than 300,000 have been enrolled. There is now talk of raising an additional "Kitcheners" battalion as a Canadian tribute to his memory. But it appears that the difficulty is in obtaining not the numbers but the right kind of men. In general, those men who can least be spared, and most belonging to those industries and occupations which can least spare them, have been the men to come forward. The system is "wasteful," "uneconomic," and the mission is sought for the purpose of "taking a census of all men in the Dominion from eighteen years and upward, specifying these married and unmarried; classifying the men according to their occupations or their fitness or preference for certain kinds of work; and classifying the industries with a view to the restriction or ultimate elimination of such as are non-essential to the welfare of the country or not economic factors."
Now we have little difficulty of this nature in Newfoundland, where it is not so much a matter of finding the right sort of men as of finding the men at all. In Mr. Blackall's report such sentences as these recur again and again: "A large number of people met in the Parish Hall." "The two volunteers came forward." "The schoolroom was packed to overflowing." "No volunteers came forward." The chief reason is given by Mr. Blackall, "Unhappily," he says, "all along the coast, the strong and able men at this time of the year are shipped and away from home."
We merely quote from these documents because we think that from Canada, more than any other country, we should take our lead and example. Fighting, after all, is only a business, like others, and in many cases it is not nearly as essential. We welcome every recruit that joins the Regiment, but even more, if possible, every addition to our Reservists. It is our boast that we are a maritime people; we should fulfil it. "The Navy," said Lieut. Lamden, "is giving us three meals a day. What should we do without the Navy?" The question will not bear asking, still less answering. But we might modify it—"What should we do for the Navy?"
Now, more than ever before, are men wanted. We are on the eve of a supreme effort, calling for supreme sacrifice. There is one question, transcending all others, for us to ask ourselves: are we rowing our weight in the boat? Let us look to Canada and answer it.

While the Empire has families such as the Trappells and others we need not fear the Huns.

FARMING.

The farmer drives his team a field and whistles as he goes. 'Twas thus some bygone poet spied of things no poet knows. Few poets ever pushed a mule across a rocky farm, or laboring with rusty tools, disabled back and arms. Burns was the only farmer hard I can remember now; and he believed the life too hard, and gladly soaked his plow. I've never heard a farmer lift his voice in ardent song, except when, at the noonday shift, he heard the dinner gong. I used to drag my weary tones the furrowed field along, and I put up a thousand groans, where I turned loose one song. The farmer has so much to do, before the day takes wing, so many errands to pursue, he has no time to sing. He only whistles now and then, when he would call the dog, to chase from out the corn again, some stray boar-headed hog. His eyes are fixed upon the sky, to note the weather signs, for rain will rust his growing rye, and spoil his pumpkin vines; and drought will kill the beans and peas he planted in the spring; and, thinking over things like these, he falls to snile and sing.

House Burnt Down.

Yesterday afternoon the house occupied by Mr. Wm. Roche, of Manuels, was burnt to the ground. The origin of the fire is unknown. Owing to the suddenness and intense heat of the blaze, the only article saved was a sewing machine. We understand the damage was covered by insurance.
