

Jeannie Sinclair,
OR,
THE LILY OF THE STRATH.
CHAPTER XXXIII.
AMONG PIRATES.

At his approach, Bree, who stood by William's side, growled, and would have sprung on him if William had not restrained him.

"So it seems we have met again," slowly remarked the Captain.

"It seems so," answered William, in a firm tone, and with a look as calm and bold as that of the other was fierce and threatening.

"And doubtless," added the Captain, "you are ready to account for the treachery by which you turned the tables on us, and defrauded us of the spoil which had fallen into our hands."

"I acknowledge no treachery," replied the youth. "The spoil which you refer to was our property. You had forcibly taken it from us, and in using the assistance which came to us to regain it we did only what we had a right to do."

"Ha! you are carrying it boldly. Methinks you forget where you are, and in what condition."

"By no means," answered William. "I and my companions are on board your ship, by your own invitation. We were in the ship you passed so close last night in the gale. It was set on fire by the lightning, and we barely succeeded in taking to the boats before the vessel went down. We have been tossed about all night in our skiff, and have had nothing to eat or drink. That is our exact condition."

"And did you bring nothing from the ship when you left her?" demanded the Pirate Captain.

"Nothing but what we wear," was the answer.

"What! None of the gold you and your Indians managed to take from us? Surely you made some effort to save that?"

"We did not need," answered the youth. "We sold the gold in San Francisco."

"Ah! and the sum you got for it. That at least, is in your possession."

"No, we banked it."

"Take care," roared the Captain. "A lie will save you nothing with us. You are in my power here, with no cunning, skulking Indians to come to your help. I will know you have the money with you, so give it up at once."

"I scorn to tell a lie in any circumstances," said William, indignantly. "What I have said is the truth, and you may believe or disbelieve it as you choose."

"I will settle that when you have been searched. Seize them, men!" he added, and instantly each found himself in the hands of several of the crew, who proceeded without ceremony to strip off their upper garments.

Resistance was useless, and no one was mad enough to attempt it. The first fellow, however, to lay hands on William Denman was at once throttled by Bree, who would speedily have made good his word with him had not his master authoritatively ordered him to release him.

This the dog did, though rather reluctantly, and the moment the man was released, he drew his pistol, and would have shot his canine assailant on the instant, had not the captain interposed and prevented the act.

"Don't be a fool, Walsh," he said. "The dog is only showing his fangs, and I mean to keep him. Throw a sail over him, some of you, and that will secure him."

This was done, and poor Bree, rolled and huddled up in the huddling covering, was rendered helpless either for his own defence or the protection of his friends.

On the person of the shipwrecked voyagers the pirates found not the money they expected, but discovered instead, in an inside pocket in the vest of Robert Douglas, a proof of the truth of what William Denman had stated; this was a draft on the bank at Shawhead for the sum of three thousand two hundred and fifty pounds. This being handed to the captain, he no sooner mastered its contents than, seeing that the bank had failed, he stamped furiously with his foot, swore a fierce oath, flung the paper from him, and ordered the prisoners to be carried below and confined in chains.

This order was at once carried into effect, and while it was being executed, Jim Murdochson, unseen by the rest, picked up the paper which the captain had flung away, and, after examining it, a flush of triumphant excitement overspread his dissipated countenance, and he carefully deposited it in a greasy pocket-book, which he thrust into his bosom.

Meanwhile the three friends were thrust into a dark receptacle in the bottom of the ship, and a chain fastened to the ankle of each, the other end being united to a ring in the stout oak plank which ran along one side of the place. It was a filthy, stifling place, and altogether dark, except for a circular bull's eye bit of glass sunk into the side near the roof, but so high, so small, and so encrusted with dirt, that the light it admitted was of the faintest description. They could not see each other's faces, but they were free to converse and console with each other on their unenviable condition and threatening prospects.

STEAMER "WAUBUNO."—We direct attention to the advertisement of the steamer Waubuno, which runs between Collingwood and Bruce Mines, Parry Sound and Bing Inlet. Last season the Waubuno proved a great convenience to parties going to Muskoka and other points on the north shore of the Georgian Bay, and this year we have no doubt she will be as well patronized. Parry Sound is one of her stopping places, which is situated in the heart of the best land in the Government Free Grant Territory, and connects with all the leading roads through it. This route is the most direct, the cheapest and best, to the Government Free Grant Lands.

ERYSIPELAS OR ST. ANTHONY'S FIRE.—It is a spreading inflammation, characterized by a redness of the skin, accompanied by a sensation of heat and itching, and more or less a constitutional derangement with swelling of the subcutaneous cellular tissues. Every part of the body is liable to erysipelas inflammation, but it most frequently appears on the face, legs and feet. Females are more subject to it than males. After a short time small vesicles, similar to those produced by blisters, present themselves. They are filled with a thin watery fluid, and are a great source of annoyance until destroyed. Dr. J. Briggs' Allevantor is a never-failing remedy. For sale by E. Harvey & Co., Guelph.

A Minnesota judge decided when a man is "legally drunk." He says: "It is not necessary that a man should be wallowing in a ditch, or bumping his head against your posts, that you may know him to be drunk; but whenever he begins to tell the same thing twice over then he's drunk."

A little boy, aged four and a half years, son of Mr. Wm. Ferguson, of Brampton, fell from a fence a few days ago, and alighted on a splintered round of a chair, sticking in the ground point upwards. It penetrated between the ribs, and pierced his lungs. He died in about twelve hours.

Mr. Rose's supplementary estimates laid before the House on Friday amounted for the deficiencies of 1898-9, to $380,795.12; and for the year ending 30th June, 1870, $1,576,676, making a total of $5,846,380.

Mr. Jas. Collins of Edmonton, was thrown off a load of potatoes on the 15th inst., and the hind wheels of the wagon passed over his shoulders and breast. Wonderful to relate he escaped without broken bones.

The first-class fare from Suspension Bridge to San Francisco, over the Pacific Railroad, is fixed at $173 greenbacks.
