TASKS FOR PRINCE OF WALES IN PARIS

French and International Law
Two of the Studies He Will Pursue.

TRAINING FUTURE KING

London's Farewell to the Prince—The Visit Pleases France—His Hosts.

London, April 18.—In accordance with the King's desire there was no ceremony at Victoria when the Earl of Chester, by which title the Prince of Wales is to be known for the next few months, started on his journey to Paris. It was the human interest of the event that attracted the little crowd on the sidewalks near the station. The women were saying to one another, not "There's the King," but "There's the young man sitting with his father." This was when the brougham went by with father and son inside.

The King saw his son into the railway coach, and, as the train started, the young man raised his hat to his father. There was no cheering when the train left. The few spectators simply raised their hats.

A few minutes later, the King drove back to the palace almost unnoticed. The opinion of the crowd was that this absence of fuss was quite in keeping with the situation.

"Why bother the young fellow with bowing and scraping and all that business now?" said one sympathizer. "Let him see a bit of life first."

And it was remembered that Paris is a place where the Prince will see life and will also be welcomed, if only for his grandfather's sake. Nothing could have pleased the French so much, nothing so likely to strengthen the entente with England as the sending of the Prince of Wales to France.

To Master French.

He goes, according to the most general expressed opinion, to learn to speak French. The first duty, educationally speaking, of a future king of England is to master the French tongue. The fact that King George speaks French with difficulty has, from the first, been regarded in France as a grave shortcoming.

The house where the Prince is to stay is a fine, but sternly severe hotel, well-built, in the Avenue du Bois, with its chief entrance around the corner in the short Rue de Rude. Twenty-five years ago a wine shop and restaurant occupied the site. The Marquis de Breteuil bought the ground and there built his hotel.

The marquis is very much liked in the neighborhood. The marquis is an American, very much liked, too, very gracious, very kind and gentle. The family is a well-known Royalist. The present marquis was born in 1845. In 1877, he left the army to enter the Chamber of Deputies as a Monarchist. He afterward became a Legitimist, and was long recognized as one of the ablest orators of the party. He has retired now from active politics.

In other ways the family is an interesting one. One of the best known members of it was Gabrielle, wife of the Marquis du Chatelet, and daughter of Baron Tonnellerie de Breteuil. This lady combined flirtation with learning in quite a remarkable way. She was born in 1706, and died at the age of 42, but she managed in that short time to translate Newton's "Principia" into French, to make Leibnitz intelligible to the French aristocracy, to play a distinguished role in the excesses of the regency, and to live from 1734 until a year before her death on terms of intimacy with Voltaire.

During his stay in Paris, the Prince of Wales, by direction of the King, will pursue a special course of study of international law. Indeed, it would almost seem as if this were the primary if not the only purpose in view, as arrangements have already been made for the prince to attend a course of lectures by professors whose names have been approved by the King. It is more than probable that as soon as he has completed his studies on the continent he will be entered for a term or so at the Inner Temple.

ROYAL YEAST
MAKES PERFECT BREAD

LETTERS, BULLETS FLEW; NOBODY HURT

Comedy of a Paris Duel Caused by the Needless Fears of a Second.

POLICE ON THE FIELD

Polite Letter Writing Resorted to When the Combat Was Called Off.

Paris, April 18.—That common form of exercise in France, the duel, is contrary to the law, but the police evidently do not read the papers, for they never try to prevent a duel or to arrest any one who has taken part in one, unless their attention has been specially called to the case.

M. Visinet and M. Gomez Carrillo had a difference of opinion at the dress rehearsal of a play which resulted in the sending of seconds; MM. Bonnaud and Renie on behalf of M. Visinet, and MM. de Blest-Gana and Thomeguex representing M. Gomez Carrillo. When the adversaries were face to face on the field of honor two cyclist policemen appeared with an order from the prefect of police to stop the proceedings. Great was the sensation along the boulevards, where such a proceeding was believed to be unprecedented, and many were the covert questions as to which of the two combatants' families had warned the authorities.

A series of polite letters—the art of polite letter writing will never die as long as French duelling exists—threw light on the extraordinary occurrence. First, M. Gomez Carrillo wrote to his adversary, saying that one of his own seconds, M. Thomeguex, had written the note of warning, that he had submitted his second's conduct to the consideration of a jury of honor, and that he was still at the disposal of M. Visinet, if the latter would receive fresh seconds. To M. Thomeguex, M. Carrillo wrote, saying that he had learned without a doubt that M. Thomeguex had warned the police, although he (Thomeguex), had of his own free will, asked to act as second.

M. Thomeguex in reply confessed he had done so in order "to do good to two young men and prevent the risk of a bullet for either," and if his principal blamed him he was ready to take the usual consequences.

Two juries of honor sat on the case of M. Thomeguex, who is a noted fencer. The Cercle Roche, the club to which all the leading swordsmen belong, decided that there was no need to ask M. Thomeguex his reason for an action which its jury considered contrary to the laws of honor. The jury of honor chosen by M. Thomeguex and Carrillo declared the incident closed by putting the blame on M. Thomeguex, so no new duel will arise. The last verdict gave the grounds for the decision reached.

M. Thomeguex, it is said, believed he was safeguarding his own responsibility and the two strangers interested—M. Carrillo is a Spaniard, M. de Blest-Gana, a Belgian—and thought he had a right to warn the police, as he had done so before signing the preliminary statement about the duel, because he had become anxious as to the possible result. He expressed his regrets and gave his word never to act as referee or witness in another duel. Meanwhile the once foiled adversaries automobile to a secluded spot in the Bois de Boulogne, exchanged bullets over 25 hastily stepped paces.

AGED "CHILDREN"

Fathers Were in Revolution.

There are still living in New England ten or more persons whose fathers were American soldiers in the Revolutionary war. All of them are over 90 and some over 100 years old. All aged and elderly persons can add greatly to their comfort by keeping their energy and strength up to the highest point through the use of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil.

Mrs. A. M. Basford, 86 years old, of Harrisonburg, Va., says: "I have been using Vinol for the past three years and am on my thirty-second bottle now. I think that Vinol will do all that it is recommended to do and that it is all that has kept me alive the past three years. I tried almost every other medicine and found Vinol the best."

Vinol is fine for old people because its immediate effect is to sharpen the appetite and enrich the blood, building up natural strength and energy. We guarantee Vinol to do all this and pay back your money if it does not. Anderson & Nelles, druggists, also W. T. Strong, London, Ont.

were reconciled and complimented each other on their letter writing and generally chivalrous conduct without any one being a whit the worse. But the seriousness with which the English take their pleasures is light-hearted frivolity to the seriousness with which the Parisians take their duels.
