CAPTURE OF ARHANGHA PASS.

A Decisive Victory for the British Forces.

SLIGHT OPPOSITION

Encountered by Gen. Westmacott, and His Loss Trifling.

MESSAGE FROM THE AMER.

In Which He States the Insurgents Are "Full of Alarm and Repentance."

LOCKHART'S CLEVER MANOEUVRE.

Which Enabled His Forces to Capture the Sempagha Pass With the Loss of But Four Killed and Twenty Wounded—The Amer Trying to Retain the Road to Kabul and to Prevent Further Trouble by Afghan Refugees.

Simla, Oct. 31.—Special despatches, received here from Gundaki to-day, announce that, owing to the difficulty in getting transport over the Sempagha Pass, General Westmacott seized the opportunity to capture the Arhangha Pass, thirteen miles from the Afghan frontier, at Sared-Koh, on Saturday, but he has been reconnoitering in force the enemy's position, which seems to be strong, and which is held by masses of the insurgent tribesmen. The valley around the pass is thickly studded with villages, apparently full of grain and fodder.

A CLEVER MANOEUVRE.

The comparatively easy capture of Sempagha Pass was due to a manoeuvre which the British Commander-in-Chief, Lord Lockhart, executed with great skill. The British troops, which were immediately reinforced by the command of an insurgent tribesman. But by so doing the chiefs weakened their centre, and the British commander, acting with great quickness, threw the main column of his troops against the enemy's centre. The tribesmen were thus taken by surprise, and their leaders did not have time to recall the forces sent to reinforce their positions, and they were obliged to abandon their positions as a hurried retreat.
