QUALITY OF WORK. 462

IN THE DARK.
(CONCLUDED.)
"Impossible!"
He nodded emphatically.
"It is a fact, though I don't pretend to explain it. These strange manifestations have been noticed at intervals for the last three or four years; ever since the house was occupied by a Captain Vandeleur, whose orphan nephew—" "Vandeleur?" I interrupted, "why, he was a client of ours. He insured his nephew's life in our office for a large amount, and—"
"And a few months afterward the child suddenly and mysteriously died?" my companion put in. "A singular coincidence, to say the least of it."
"No singular," I acquiesced, "that we thought it a case for inquiry, particularly as the captain did not hear the least of character, and was known to be a sober and careful man. But I am bound to say that after the closest investigation nothing was discovered to suggest a suspicion of foul play."
"Nevertheless there had been foul play," was the doctor's reply.
"You don't mean that he murdered the boy?" I asked, fragile-looking little fellow.
"No, he did not murder him, but he let him die," Dr. Cameron rejoined. "Perhaps you are not aware," he continued, "that the little lad was somewhat feeble in mind as well as body?" I nodded him more than once, as Vandeleur's request and found that among other strange fears and apprehensions he had a morbid dread of darkness. To be left alone in a dark room for only a few minutes was enough to throw him into a paroxysm of nervous excitement. His mother—who, by the way, professed more affection for him than I could quite believe in, when I noticed how the child shrank from him—consoled him as to the best means of overcoming this weakness. I strongly advised him to humor it for the present, warning him that any mental shock might endanger the boy's reason, or even his life. I little thought those words of mine would prove his death-warrant.
"What do you mean?"
"Only a few days afterward, Vandeleur looked him up all night in a dark closet, where he was found the next morning, crouching against the wall; his hands clenched, his eyes fixed and staring—dead."
"Good heavens, how horrible! But no word of this was mentioned at the inquest?"
"No; and I did not hear of it myself till long afterward, from a woman who had since been Vandeleur's housekeeper, but was much afraid of him to betray him at the time. From her, too, I learned by what refined cruelty the poor little lad's nerves had been shaken and his health undermined. If the intention made the deed, James Vandeleur was a murderer." I was silent a moment, thinking, with an uncomfortable thrill, of Ethel's dream.
"I wish I had never entered this ill-considered house," I exclaimed, "but I had no other choice." I looked at the doctor, and he smiled at my remark.
"Why need you tell her?" he questioned.
"My advice is to say nothing more about it. The sooner she forgets the subject the better. Send her away to the seaside change of air and scenes will soon efface it from her memory."
He rose as he spoke, and took up his hat.
"What has become of Vandeleur?" I inquired. "I have heard nothing of him since we paid the purchase price."
"He has been living abroad, I believe—going to the dogs, no doubt. But he is in England now," the doctor added. "For it was his father which I saw at your gate the other night."
"At your gate?" I asked in astonishment. "What the deuce was he doing there?"
"He seemed to be watching the house.
It was last Sunday evening. I had been dining with friends at Richmond, and on my way back, between 11 and 12 o'clock, I noticed a man leaning over the gate of the Cedars. On hearing footsteps he turned and walked away, but not before I had caught a glimpse of his face in the moonlight."
"And you are sure it was he?"
"Almost certain. His face was greatly altered for the worse. I have presently heard of him, you know that you will see him, if you yourself before long."
"I had taken a very hearty dislike to the Cedars, and resolved to get it off my hands as soon as might be.
"Until another tenant could be found, however, I continued to occupy it, going to and from town as before.
One evening I was sitting on the lawn, smoking an after-dinner cigar, and re-reading Ethel's letter, which quite reassured me as to her health and spirits, when our old housekeeper presented herself with the information that a "party" had called to see the house.
"A gentleman, sir," he didn't give his name.
I found the visitor standing near the open window of the drawing-room; a tall, gaunt man of thirty-five or thereabouts, with handsome but haggard features, and restless dark eyes. His lips were covered by a thick moustache, which was nerveously twitching as he stood looking out at the lawn.
"This house is to be let, I believe; will you allow me to look over it?" he asked, turning toward me.
His voice seemed familiar; I looked at him more closely, and then, in spite of the change in his appearance, I recognized Captain Vandeleur.
What could have brought him here, I wondered. Surely he would not care to return to the house, even if he were in a position to do so—which, judging from the shabbiness of his appearance, seemed very doubtful.
Half a dozen vague conjectures flashed through my mind, as I glanced at his face, and noticed the restless, hunted look which told of some wearing dread or anxiety.
After a moment's hesitation I assented to his request, and resolved to conduct him myself on his tour of inspection.
"I think I have met you before," I said, feeling curious to know whether he recollected me.
He glanced at me absently.
"Possibly—but not of late years; for I have been living abroad," was his reply.
Having shown him the apartments on the ground floor, I led the way up stairs.
He followed me from room to room in an absent, listless fashion, till we came to the chamber which Ethel had occupied. He noticed the restless, hunted look which I had noticed in the drawing-room.
He glanced quickly round the walls, his eyes resting on the door of the box-room.
"That is a bath or dressing-room, I suppose," he said, nodding toward it.
"No, only a place for linen. Perhaps I ought to tell you that it is said to be haunted," I added, affecting to speak carelessly, while I kept my eyes on his face.
He started and turned toward me.
"Haunted—by what?" he inquired with a faint smile. "Nothing worse than a rat."
"I expect."
"There is a tragical story connected with that place," I answered, deliberately close to his (the man's) nose, and his nothing smaller than a five-dollar bill, his pocket. All the "old masters" that ever handled a brush couldn't begin to catch these expressions.

—The best way to repair strength and increase the only substance is to invigorate the stomach and improve the circulation with Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyppepnic Care. Simultaneously with the disappearance of indigestion and the nervousness which are so much the province of dyspepsia at the weakness of the stomach and loss of vigor and flesh which proceed from it, at a blood purified it is no more.
—Fencing is becoming a craze among girls.
Those of us who have seen a girl trying to get over a barbed wire fence know that there is plenty of room for improvement.

—It costs only about twenty cents to get drunk in Canada. A man can get drunk for nothing in this country, but it frequently costs like sixty to get sober, we've been told.
—Orpha M. Hodges, Battle Creek, Mich., water on my head. I at once applied Dr.

Thomas' Electric Oil, and the effect was to immediately allay the pain. I was cured in three days.

"It is cheering," says an exchange, "to know that intemperance is losing ground in Boston." Yes, it is time that intemperance is losing ground here, but the liquor dealers are making up the major part of the real estate loss there.
—Orion Castle, 49 Pearl Street, Buffalo, N. Y., says: "I tried various remedies for breathless, but found no relief until I used Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, which entirely cured me after a few applications. All colic, indigestion, flatulency, and other diseases, unprincipled persons are imitating it.
