God Save the Queen. MERCHANTS are not such fools as to be away above the market in the price of their goods. Their customers would only laugh at their folly. Every cent of the cost is figured up and a fair profit put on, which decides the price for the market hence a solid straight business, which often brings them a fortune. Without this system a large business could not be properly managed. In real estate all sorts of prices are asked—often 30 or 40 per cent. more than the owner would gladly accept, leaving the difference to be haggled over, making it an unsatisfactory business to the buyer, and ultimately to the seller.
