How Khaki was Discovered

Khaki, the color which renders our soldiers so difficult to see, was discovered by a happy accident. The British troops in India wore a cotton uniform which, when it was new, was khaki in colour, but after a visit to the laundry was indescribable. A Manchester business man, discussing this defect, remarked casually that a fortune awaited the man who could find a khaki dye that neither sun, soap, nor soda would fade. A young officer heard the remark, hired a skilful native dyer, and began the seasch. Years passed in fruitless experiments, till one day. $88.56, net profit per acre in 1912, meets in the Hall every Thursday turning over a heap of rags, relics $135.74, on an average profit for the turning over a heap of rags, relics $135.74, on an average profit for the afternoon, with a large attendance to prairie settlers for planting as of their failures, they chanced upon one piece which was still khaki, though the laundry had worked its will. But it had received no special treatment, so far as they knew, except that it had fallen into a metal dish. That was the secret. The metal of the dish and the chemicals in the dye had combined to produce that fadeless khaki colour which makes our soldiers invisible and turned the lieutenant into a millionaire.
