unexpectedly to dinner—they would not answer for their lives a single day unless they give up such unwholesome practices.

Wemen have got already sufficient means of mestering us. Let them have doctors of their own sex to assist them, and the hasband's case will be indeed a hard one.

"Perhaps, after all, there is no great absurdity in the notion of female physicians. All physicians except these who pratice gratuitously, may be designated by the word female spell with another a; and there are not a few of whom that is all that can be said. If the head woman is not calculated for the formation of a diagnoss she can at least shake it in a difficult case, as effectually as a man can; and having a softer and more musical voice than the masculine, she is better qualified than the most men are for that large part of medical practice which consists in whispering comfort to invalids."—Punck.
