

Soon we'll have a radio station at the camp, and then the problem will solve itself.

However, there are two sides to every coin. As we have found out, the activists of the trade-union local, the deputy of the City Council, and dozens of others who actively take the initiative at work, all live in the camp. Why can't they take on at least part of the organization? The trailer-camp has been in existence for more than ten years, but the community council was only set up at the very end of last year. Now the ball is in its court. Let the Council, and not just a correspondent, ask P. Kamyshev, deputy commander of the Air Transport Authority's ground support services, what to do about housing repairs when there aren't even any nails at the maintenance supplies warehouse. Let him write to the Nadym City council of People's Deputies and ask why there is nothing in the local store other than tinned goods which were produced, it would seem, before the town even appeared. And let him ask at the same time those who refuse to help out in community improvement projects, who don't care about the mountains of sand, frozen solid since last autumn. His opinion, in today's conditions of democratization and openness, will hold more weight than that of a person who flew into Nadym for three or four days.

"It isn't enough to just criticize nowadays", said S. Efremov, Commander of the Air Transport Authority, at a meeting. "Put your money where your mouth is."
