

CONTENTS.

v

CHAPTER XII.

BEGINNING OF THE WAR OF 1812.

The British Regency—Political Affairs in Europe, 233; the Troops and Fortifications on the Northern Frontier, 234; Sea-coast Defenses of the United States, 235-238; Fulton's Torpedoes and their Uses, 238-240; Fulton's Anticipations, 241; Effects of a Fear of Torpedoes, 242; the Action of State Governments concerning the War, 243; public Feeling in Canada, 244; Signs of Pacification, 245; conditional Revocation of the Orders in Council, 246; haughty Assumptions of the British Government on the Subject of Search and Imprisonment, 247; War inevitable and justifiable, 248; Choice of military Leaders, 249, 250.

CHAPTER XIII.

HULL'S CAMPAIGN AGAINST CANADA.

Canada to be invaded—Object of the Invasion, 251; Organization of an Army in Ohio—an active Frontiersman, 253; Author's Journey through Ohio, 254; General Hull takes Command of Ohio Volunteers, 255; regular and volunteer Troops in the Wilderness, 256; Hull's March to Detroit, 257; his Baggage and Papers captured, 258; how the British in Canada were informed of the Declaration of War, 259; Detroit in 1812, 260; Hull invades Canada, 261, 262; Reconnoissance toward Malden, 263; first Battle of the War, 264, 265; Distrust of General Hull, 266; first Blood shed in the War, 267; early Scenes at Mackinaw, 268, 269; Events at Mackinaw in 1812, 270; Employment of the Indians by the British, 271.

CHAPTER XIV.

CAMPAIGN ON THE DETROIT FRONTIER.

Alarming Facts and Rumors, 272; Preparations in Canada for resisting Invasion, 273; Alarm caused by the Invasion, 274; Symptoms of Disloyalty—General Brock's Influence, 275; Defeat of Americans under Van Horne at Brownstown, 276; mutinous Spirit evinced in Hull's Army, 277; Expedition to succor a Supply-train, 278; the March toward the River Raisin, 279; Battle of Maguaga, 280, 281; Disappointment and Disaffection of the American Troops, 282; Brock goes to Malden with Troops, 283; Preparations for attacking Detroit, 284; Hull deceived—an Effort to reach a Supply-train, 285; Hull summoned to surrender, and refuses, 286; the British proceed to attack Detroit, 287; Scenes within the Fort, 288; Hull surrenders the Fort, Garrison, and Territory, 289; Feeling of the Troops—Result of the Surrender, 290; Incidents of the Surrender, 291; British Occupation of Detroit and Michigan, 292; Account of the Surrender, and public Indignation, 293; Hull tried by a Court-martial, 294; a Consideration of Hull's public Character, 295; the Government more to blame than Hull, 296.

CHAPTER XV.

MILITARY EVENTS IN THE THEN FAR NORTHWEST.

The Author's Journey from Chicago to Detroit, 297; a Ride from Windsor to Amherstburg, 298; Historical Localities at Amherstburg or Malden, 299; Windsor and "Windsor Castle," 300; Pontiac's Siege of Detroit, 301; Chicago, its Name, Settlement, and Position, 302; Trading-house and Fort at Chicago, 303; an Indian Raid, 304; Troubles at Chicago, 305; Treachery of the Indians—a Warning, 306; Munitions of War and Liquor destroyed, 307; Massacre at Chicago, 308; Incident of the Conflict with the Savages—Bravery of Women, 309; Cruelties of the Indians—their British Allies, 310; Survivors of the Massacre, 311; Mrs. Kenzie and the Growth of Chicago, 312; Designs against Fort Wayne, 313; Attack on Fort Wayne, 314; Ravages of the Indians—Little Turtle, 315; Treachery of Indians at Fort Wayne, 316; Fort Harrison besieged, 317; brave Deeds at Fort Harrison, 318; Attack on Fort Madison, 319.

CHAPTER XVI.

WAR WITH THE BRITISH AND INDIANS IN THE NORTHWEST.

The Nation aroused—Enthusiasm of the People, 320; Harrison and the Kentuckians, 321; Harrison at the Head of Kentucky Volunteers, 322; Departure for the Wilderness, 323; Volunteers flock to Harrison's Standard, 324; Fort Wayne relieved—Destruction of Indian Villages, 325; Harrison's Popularity—he commands the Northwestern Army, 326; Winchester met by British and Indians in the Wilderness, 327; Re-enforcements gathering, 328; Harrison's proposed autumn Campaign, 329; reported Movement through the Wilderness, 330; Erection of Forts, 331; the Indians alarmed and humbled, 332; the Author's Visit to the Theatre of War, 333; Preparations for further Warfare, 334; Expedition against the Indians in the Illinois Country, 335; Expedition to the Wabash Region, 336; Sufferings of the Kentucky Soldiers, 337.

CHAPTER XVII.

WAR WITH THE BRITISH AND INDIANS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Harrison cheerfully meets Difficulties, 338; Difficulties of a winter Campaign, 339; Organization of the Army—the Western Reserve, 340; Preparations in Ohio against Invasion, 341; Energy and Patriotism of Colonel Wadsworth, 342; an Expedition to the Maumee, 343; stirring Events at the Maumee Rapids, 344; Services of friendly Indians, 345; Campbell's Expedition into the Wabash Region, 346; a Battle near the Mississiniwa, 347; Sufferings and Difficulties of Harrison's Army, 348, 349; Advance toward the Maumee Rapids, 350; Frenchtown on the Raisin River threatened, 351; Battle at Frenchtown, 352; Winchester arrives with Re-enforcements, 353; he disregards Warnings of Danger, 354; Massacre at Frenchtown, 355; Winchester compelled to surrender his Army, 356; Perfidy, Cowardice, and Inhumanity of the British Commander, 357; Massacre and Scalping allowed by him, 358; Incidents of the Massacre, 359; Author's Visit to Frenchtown, 360; historical Localities and Survivors of the War there, 361, 362; Harrison unjustly censured, 363; his Army at the Maumee Rapids, 364.