PARTY CHOICES HARD TO GUESS

"Dark Horses" May Win at Both Republican and Democratic Conventions.

New York, May 30.—With the two main national party conventions scheduled for June, the Republican at Chicago, the Democratic at San Francisco, widespread interest is displayed today in the probable chances of the multitude of aspirants for the two presidential nominations. This is especially the case in the Republican race for nomination, in which the entries are many and the pace fast. While the Democrats are apparently leaving the struggle to be fought out at the San Francisco convention, to which most Democratic delegates from the various states are being sent uncommitted, the Republicans have been engaged for weeks in a hot pre-convention campaign, with the leading figures in the party bidding against one another for control of state delegations to Chicago. Despite this difference in tactics, those who profess ability to analyze political conditions in the United States assert that the picking of a possible candidate is as difficult in one party as in the other. The results of the state primaries have been so complicated that they indicate nothing clearly. This is a "Republican year," the dopesters say. The Democrats, at present in control of the administration in Washington, are doggedly on the defensive, while the Republican "outs" are attacking fiercely. The consensus of opinion is that at both conventions there is a splendid opening for a "dark horse." Many war-scarred political veterans assert that when the balloting at Chicago and San Francisco is over, the chosen two will not bear any of the names now being bandied about as possibilities during the pre-convention scramble.
