W. Claire Marriott of Gait was decidedly opposed to making the scout organization a feeder for the militia. He declared that what they should first seek to do was to develop good citizens and upbuild Canadian manhood. He realized that there was a value to the empire in having the youth familiarized with the topography of the country which could not be estimated. This would be of more value than a military training in a time of danger. This had been demonstrated during the Boer war.

Others who participated in the discussion were B. W. Ware of London, J. G. Gibson of Ingersoll, George Acheof Bothwell, H. G. Hammond of Toronto, secretary for Ontario, and C. J. Atkinson of the Broadview Boys'
