ST. GEORGE MAN IN THE POLICE COURT

George Finnigan the Central Figure in a Peculiar Case Heard This Morning.

In the session of the police court this morning the examination of George Finnigan was taken up. Finnigan was accused of assaulting and pursuing Mrs. Margaret Butler, on Broad street last night. Mrs. Butler testified that Finnigan attempted to seize her as she was proceeding to her home at half past nine and after she eluded his advances he followed her across Broad street, smiting her with a fist and making gestures, being apparently under the hallucination that he was a deaf mute. He retreated after being threatened with arrest by an elderly woman to whom Mrs. Butler fled for refuge. Later he re-appeared and was captured by the husband of the witness who gave him into the custody of Policeman Ross.

On Monday night shortly after eleven o'clock Mrs. Butler and her little daughter were alone in her house on Sydney street, near Broad. The mother had occasion to send the little girl to the yard and in a moment the latter burst into the house in terror declaring that she perceived the figure of a man creeping up her hands and knees toward her. She escaped to the house by a narrow margin and both mother and daughter succeeded in repelling the attempt of the marauder to enter by the door until the bolt was pushed into its socket. Investigation by her husband and neighbors later revealed no trace of the man. Mrs. Butler would not swear that the prisoner was the same individual.

Policeman Ross was examined regarding the arrest. The shrieks of the women brought him to the scene.

Finnigan said he was desirous of communicating with several citizens here who could vouch for his character. He claimed to be a stone cutter, but he is employed as a stone cutter on Tuesday at half-past six and if he accented Mrs. Butler he did not intend to do so as he had always respected the weaker sex. He intended to resume his journey to Halifax on the late train last night and positively denied Monday night's episode. He was remanded.

This suggestion will probably be considered at Monday's meeting.

HE WANTED HIS BED BUT GOT SOMETHING ELSE

Albert Alberts Tells a Tale of Woe in the Police Court.

In the finale of a dispute which Magistrate Ritchie was called upon to adjust this morning, the contesting parties were a fluent dandy, and a naturally, the latter was victorious.

Albert Alberts, the complainant, alleged that a woman named Kay assaulted him on Sunday at her house while he was inquiring for his bedstead. Alberts mounted the hustings like a true orator and assailed the judge with a battery of words and cross fire of sentences in an inimitable manner. He said: "Well! an' life a bed in fath's woodshed last summer an' on Sunday mornin' she hit me with a broom an' a dish pan, an' when she fell down stairs she threw a poker at me, sash, which jes' missed mah ear. Ah've been married only a year. I remember dat, becuz ah had pendicets just befo' ah got hitched, but ah don't sure want to 'sgrate, youah honest, so kaint say exactly ah would go on Sunday, sash, but ah had to go to Gaspereaux in de nex' mornin'. An', sash, she spat right in mah face without warnin'."

The woman admitted meeting Alberts as he knocked at her door, with a full set of boards, broom, household utensils, poker and profanity, but said she had no knowledge of the whereabouts of the bedstead.

The case was dismissed and the complainant informed that he should not approach the woman on the Sabbath.

Alberts married a young white girl from the West Side. The Kay woman has received the attention of the court on previous occasions.

LETTER FROM THOS. ROBINSON

To the Editor of The Evening Times:

Sir:—With reference to article recently appearing in the Times about a horse belonging to me I may say that I keep four or five horses all the time in my stable on Dorchester street. I have never at any time had any intention of keeping a dog in my case among my horses, and have none now—or any sign of such a thing. My horses have the best of care, are well fed and taken care of and show it in their appearance on the street.

As to the recent trouble I have had about a horse, the dry mare in one front foot only and that only when shoes were tight. I had him down from time to time and he, as soon as he got off the rocky streets, was all right. Thinking he would be better in the country, I sold him to a farmer on the St. John River.

THOS. ROBINSON.
