A PURCHASE AT BIRKS PROMOTES CANADIAN INDUSTRY
How a Birks Hair Brush is Made
 Sterling Silver Toiletware made by Birks' has secured for its self an unquestionable high standard of quality. Visitors on going through our factory, especially ladies, have remarked on the method of the production of a Silver Hair Brush. Briefly, the secret of this reliability lies in the fact that the Silver mount is practically one solid piece.
 The standard patterns are stamped from our own dies, and fitted with Brushes, the Bristles of which are of first grade English make. The method of mounting is that of beating the Silver over the brush back—a far superior treatment and considerably more satisfactory than the use of glue or cement. The various delicate designs of the rich hand-engraving follows according to patterns.
 The same thoroughness and care is given to the making of the Nail File or the Buffer, and the smaller pieces which go with a complete set. Our New Catalogue shows some interesting factory views of Silverware in the making, and explains in full Birks' "Year to Year" idea.
