focussed throngs of people all the time, and the several concessionaires all made considerable money, some of course reaping a larger harvest of shekels than others. The harmonious and uniform fronts, the blaze of lights and the hoarse shouts of the barkers gave to this section of the grounds a metropolitan spice and allurement that proved irresistible to the strangers, and in many cases those who came to scoff remained to pay.

That such a notable success was achieved in spite of the adverse circumstances that confronted them, is highly complimentary to the management. Without doubt the major portion of the work contributing to the very satisfactory results was performed by President Skinner, the association executive, and Manager Milligan. An unusually vigorous campaign of publicity was initiated by the latter, and loyally and enthusiastically entered in this direction the president, manager and members of the executive referred to in terms of high appreciation in the course of their speeches Saturday night.
