MONCTON.

[Pronouns for sale in Moncton at the book store of W. W. Black and W. H. Murray, Main street.]

Serv. 30.—I have done my best to make this column blossom like the rose. The floral decorations that I have lavished upon it, in the way of literature, have been almost sufficient to conceal the original structure altogether, but as surely as I spend more time than usual on it, and send an especially brilliant triumph of genius to the press, just so surely does the mail service step in and trample those sweet flowers under the iron heel of a train that seems to be going the wrong way, whenever it has my MSS. on board. I sent at least a column of literature down last week—to call it correspondence would not be doing it justice—and when six inches of bald facts, stripped of all their graceful and appropriate language, appeared on Saturday, the iron entered into my soul and I vowed in my displeasure that in future, only hard facts would I write, and unadorned with the playful fancies of my own bright wit. Speaking of playful fancies, W. S. Gilbert, of "Pinafore" fame, wrote a pretty little poem, in which he set forth in touching language the hardships of the professional burglar who wanted to lay aside business cares occasionally and have a playful little time, like other people, in his employment.

"When the fellow's not engaged in his employment; Or maturing his felonious little plans, little plans; His capacity for innocent enjoyment, content enjoyment; Just as great as any honest man's."

So the festive burglar, who merely makes a profession of the "acquisition of property," as John Strange Winter writes, has been having a very pleasant little time in Moncton lately. He has been prowling around paying a series of social evening calls, entirely to his own satisfaction, if not quite to that of his involuntary hosts. During one of these visits, the burglar's cousin who partook of a cold collation at the expense of the said hosts, though not always with their knowledge, and the burglar has treated himself right royally. You see, the correspondent is not entirely free from the suspicion that the ferocious burglar above mentioned may have been merely the servant girl's cousin who partook of a cold collation at the expense of the said hosts, though not always with their knowledge, and the burglar has treated himself right royally.

Mr. Harrison, cream velling, with trimmings of lace and embroidery, and no ornaments except her lovely hair. Mrs. Parson, as usual, looked stylish in a black net, and trimmings of black satin ribbon.
