Claimed Construction Company Paid Former City Engineer of Montreal $100 a Month — Denies Accusations.

Montreal, July 8.—According to evidence heard at the Notre Dame De Grace sewer investigation this afternoon at the City Hall, $100 a month as paid by the Harris Construction company to E. Pelland, a former city engineer, in charge of the work for that was explained to be reports on the quantities dug out of the trench, the total amount paid to the ex-engineer was stated to be $1,000. In evidence already heard it was shown that Pelland passed the reports on estimates on which contractors were paid. The present enquiry is to determine alleged over charges.

EXPULSION OF BRITISH SUBJECT FROM MEXICO

El Paso, Texas, July 8.—George St. Clair Douglas, the British subject who was recently tried before a court martial at Zazatecas City on a charge of having assisted the federalists in their defense of the city, has been ordered expelled from Mexico. Manuel Carlos De la Vega, revolutionary governor of Zazatecas state, ordered the expulsion. Douglas is expected to arrive here in a few days.

The London Fur Market Has Ruled the World's Prices

Frank Tuplin Gives his Ideas of the Business and his Connection with it — Has Helped Many to Invest Advantageously—No Black Fox Fur on Market, Silver is the Correct Name—Has Made a Million.

One of the best authorities in the world on the raising of black foxes is Frank J. Tuplin of Summerside, P. E. I., who is one of the most successful having accumulated a fortune estimated at a million dollars.

Here are some of the statements given made by Mr. Tuplin concerning various phases of the industry:

"The black fox industry as it is carried on in Prince Edward Island is the most profitable business by all odds of any in Canada. Today men are making fortunes who but a short time ago were plodding on their farms working hard from sun to sun, and doing little more than making ends meet."

"Nor is this business confined to the male population alone. The writer has established several of the more courageous of the gentler sex in this important industry, and it is safe to state that as fur producers they will prove strong competitors in the market of the future."

"It may not be generally known that the black and silver fox are one and the same thing, the only difference being that some are dark and some are light, that is to say some of them are silvered with black tips. Two silver foxes may produce black foxes, while a pair of jet black foxes may produce silvers."

"There is no such thing called on the London fur market as a black fox pelt. The jet black fox pelt is always listed as silver."

"All fox fur is darker the first year. The older the fox, the more prominent the silver becomes. To my mind there is too much tendency among breeders to produce the black, which is accomplished by a careful selection and mating of the black foxes, while the silver fox is produced by a like selection and mating of the foxes, best silver; but as fashion is continually changing, the prudent fox breeder will keep both in stock in order to supply the requirements of the market."

This applies more particularly to the selling of pelts. Fox dealers here are selling, and will continue for years to sell, their stock wholly for breeding purposes. Of course red is the predominating color of foxes the world over, but many experienced breeders have concluded, like Jacob or old that they can produce at will any color desired.

"For a long time the silver fox was thought to be only a freak of nature, but by a careful selection as above noted, it has now become a distinct species; and in Prince Edward Island, where the business has developed into a fine scientific art, a family of royal black and silver foxes has been established which may be classed as the best in the world, and pelts shipped from here have brought fabulous prices when sold in the London market. Sometimes an occasional silver pelt of a wild fox will command a high price, but such occasions are very rare, and the vendor of foxes who have been bred in captivity, has manifold advantages over the man who offers the wild fox skin. The former has complete control over his animal, he fattens and feeds him after an improved method and in the month of December, when he is at his best and before the fur commences to rub or chafe, he kills him in a scientific manner and thus has his fur in perfect condition. The hunter is glad to get his trophy as early as October or as late as March or in fact whenever he can get cunning Reynard straight for his gun, or within the jaws of his cruel trap, or by means of the alluring poison which he seductively places for him and thus perhaps when the skin is mutilated or the fur in an imperfect condition, but the fur will not command one half its proper value."

"The life of a fox is about twelve years and they will breed until they are about nine or ten years old. In captivity, the fox, if properly handled, becomes partially tame. In fact, some of the females, of course those who are in the hands of an experienced keeper; the males are as a rule much quieter than the females. Of course foxes differ in disposition the same as any other animals do. Some are quite nervous while others may be very tame but believe they could be raised through more foxiness and become a little more shy."

"Foxes in my opinion can be raised successfully (if the attendant be properly educated) almost anywhere in Canada but more particularly in the Maritime Provinces, Ontario and Quebec. They can also be successfully raised in Newfoundland and in the Northern States of America, and I believe they could be raised through the Middle States but they would have to have access to the ground at all times, or else the extreme heat might destroy the young in mid-summer and even the old might succumb to the humidity of that climate. Foxes from warm climates are too lightly furred and consequently command small prices, while the fur of the fox from the extreme north is too coarse in quality and is therefore undesirable, but the native fox of Prince Edward Island is the best in the world whether it be red or black. It would seem that this latitude therefore was the happy medium between the extreme cold of the north and the intense heat of the south. Here the fur of the native born is fine and second to none in quality."

"But it is not of the value of the silver pelt particularly that I wish to speak. This important industry is now confined and will, I believe, during the next few years be confined to the selling of live foxes for breeding purposes. It is the almighty dollar that counts in this, as well as any other business, and the call for breeding foxes is so great that it will take at least some years to supply this demand. I have been frequently asked, 'How long will the business last? How long will the present high prices continue?' In answer to this I may state that in my humble judgment I do not think there will be a black or silver fox of good quality purposely killed in Canada during the next five years."

"The London market rules the fur market of the world, and as the demand for live foxes is becoming greater every year, this must necessarily lessen the supply sent there and the few skins going there will consequently be greatly enhanced in value, and this enhanced value will correspondingly increase the demand for breeding foxes. For the succeeding five years, we will, perhaps be selling both live foxes and fox pelts and thereafter the business will be pretty much confined to the selling of pelts. Even foxes and sell their skins at $20 or less, and make double the money almost any farmer can on his farm, and then believe it will be an exceedingly good paying business, for with the experience I now have, and my belief in future prospects, I could raise foxes and sell their skins at $20 or less, and make double the money almost any farmer can on his farm, and then believe it will be an
