Clever Parrots.
Charlie has a great fondness for the paste of which pie crust is made, and, this being known, he was often treated to a piece. He naturally looked for this, and, when forgotten, he would invite himself to some, in the form of words which had often doubtless been used by his mistress. He would say: "Charlie, do you like paste? Will you have a bit?" This would be said in the voice of his mistress or her daughter. He would then add, in quite a changed tone, "Oh, rather!"
I am inclined to fancy that parrots learn and perhaps understand phrases relating to eating and drinking almost sooner than any others. One of my feathered acquaintances was in the habit of inviting visitors to take refreshment. "Won't you have a cup of tea? Do have a cup of tea," she would say; and sometimes it was really awkward, as almost compelling the mistress to extend her hospitality to visitors for when such an invitation had not previously been intended. This bird was also fond of saying "Good-bye!" and never said it at the wrong time. When the visitor was about to depart, he or she would be startled by a voice from a personage hitherto unseen saying, "Well, good-bye! rood-bye!" If that parrot did not know that this was the proper thing to say, and that this was the proper time for saying it, I am no judge of parrots.
This bird had been taught to count up to six, but she could rarely say the numbers all in order. She often missed one—two, the same figure, however; three, four, or five were, but only one at a time, her usual omissions. She was always conscious that she had made a mistake, and on "skipping" a figure would give a shrill comical whistle and begin again. Some kind of thought and calculation must have passed through her mind during this performance.

War Talk.
Apprehension has suddenly sprung up in various European capitals. Whence these annual or semi-annual war panics originate it is difficult to say. The chief significance of their constant recurrence lies in the fact that they indicate that, in spite of all that has been said, the peace of Europe is on a very insecure foundation. Not long ago the storm-center was in Paris, where the entirely friendly visit of the ex-Empress Frederick suddenly brought to light the depth and intensity of the smoldering animosity between the French and Germans. Now it comes, as it has so often come before, from the Balkan regions. Two weeks ago an attempt was made to assassinate the Bulgarian Premier, M. Stambouloff, but in the dark the assassin made the blunder of killing his colleague, M. Balcheff, the Minister of Finance. It was instantly suspected that a Russian intrigue lay behind this incident, and that the assassination was part of a plan to secure Russian control of Bulgaria. M. Stambouloff is the principal obstacle in the way of that control. Russia, meanwhile, is moving large masses of troops to the southward and westward, and is concentrating a considerable force on the Galician frontier. Last week the Emperor of Austria made a very pacific speech, and there is no doubt that the Emperor of Germany firmly believes that he can preserve the peace of Europe; but Russia is, after all, the source of danger, and no one can predict Russian action. It is believed in many quarters that Russia is steadily making preparations for war, and that those preparations will be complete not later than the end of this year.
