“Capital,” says Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. “I wish every religious man could read it.”

“A book to stir the sluggish, to wake the sleepers, to right-about everyone toward the righteousness of the present war in behalf of a larger liberalism, a truer freedom.”

—Washington Star.

“Not merely frank, but vigorous and such as to lead one to see Christ's teaching in a clearer light.”

—N. Y. Evening Post.

TAPS: A Book <sup>for</sup> the Boys in Khaki

“A soldier's ‘book of information’ and help not in the ‘Manual.’ A work of great interest and value in the fight for Christ and Freedom.”

A book written expressly for Uncle Sam's boys. It deals with the salient evils and temptations which await the young soldier just joining the colors. The author's son is among the boys in the National army for whom this book sounds the alarm and points out the road to victory.

What the War is Teaching

By CHARLES E. JEFFERSON, D.D.

“The words of Dr. Charles E. Jefferson ought to be nailed to the doorposts of every Christian memory.”—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

“The nature of war, its effect upon man, its effect upon the moral law, the part religion has to play, is written with a passion and a wealth of information which holds the interest. A challenging note which men ought to hear.”

—Congregationalist.
