

INTRODUCTION.

The writer, having completed ten years' service in charge of the Provincial Board of Health, deems it fitting briefly to review that period, and to indicate the lines along which progress has been made. It is thought desirable that this review should be preceded by a very brief outline of the earlier history of public health in Ontario. This information has been culled from reports of the Board, and from material furnished by former officials of the Board. It is repeated here in order to afford something of continuity to the Public Health History of the Province of Ontario.
