Two Good Patriots

By The BARONESS ORCZY.

Being the disposition of citizenship Fanny Russell, who was brought— together with her husband—before the Tribunal of the Revolution on a charge of treason; both being subsequently acquitted.

MY name is Fanny Russell, and I am a respectable married woman, and as good a patriot as any of you sitting there.

Aye! and I'll say it with my dying breath, though you may send me to the guillotine—as you probably will, for you are all thieves and murderers, every one of you, and you have already made up your minds that I and my man are guilty of having sheltered that accursed Englishman whom they call the Scarlet Pimpernel—and of having helped him to escape.

But I'll tell you how it all happened, because, though you call me a traitor to the people of France, yet I am a true patriot, and will prove it to you by telling you exactly how everything occurred, so that you may be on your guard against the cleverness of that man who I do believe is a friend and confederate of the devil—else how could he have escaped that time?

But in the evenings the place was quite deserted, and so lonely that at times we fancied that we could hear the wolves howling in the forest of St. Pierre.

It was close on 8 o'clock, and my man was putting up the shutters, when suddenly we heard the tramp of feet on the road outside, and then the quick word "Halt!"

The next moment there was a peremptory knock at the door. My man opened it, and there stood four men in uniform of the 9th Regiment of the Line—the same that is quartered at Calais. The uniform of course I knew well, though I did not know the men by sight.

"In the name of the people, and by order of the Committee of Public Safety!" said one of the men who stood in the forefront, and who I noticed had a corporal's stripe on his left sleeve.

He held out a paper which was covered with seals and with writing, but as neither my man

"Business as Usual"

We are reminded by many prominent persons that Canada's motto at the present juncture should be "BUSINESS AS USUAL."

To the end of September the business of The Great-West Life for 1914 is over $21,000,000, an amount largely ahead of 1913, and the period includes the four best months on record. The expectations are for a vigorous Fall and Winter Business.

An active presentation of the Company's excellent plans leads, and will lead to "BUSINESS AS USUAL."
