from her face and her eyes wide with apprehension. "I should faint the first moment I touched him."

At the head of the stairs Harriet pulled herself away from the others. But at the same moment down the long hall from the Lawton apartments came a high-pitched cry...

The trailing green Harriet's hands held up, dropped in a soft heap upon the carpet, her head whirled, and she was tossed down upon it...

"What was it the big bear said?" "Ugh! Ugh!" came in a voice choked with wailing sobs.

"Ugh-e! Ugh-e!" came again in the midst of spent sobs. "And the bear littler than the little bear--what did he say?"

"Hold on, Miss Harriet! Don't break the record now." Something pungent was fluttering close to her nostrils, and she was drawn gently to the open window.

said, holding the now weeping girl close. "To think we should ever have allowed you to dub yourself 'Harriet the Helpless'!" Then she stopped. There was that in Harriet's eyes which made chaffing unseemly.

THE HARVEST BARREL. Bobby and Betty had just eaten supper when the door-bell rang. They were expecting the expressman to bring them something, so they ran to the window to look out.

There is only one way by which rheumatism can be cured. It must be treated through the blood. Liniments and outward applications may give temporary relief, but they can't possibly cure the trouble.
