Feet in the Net.
You have not gone far in life if you have not discovered that the way is full of nets into which our unwary, or perhaps our helpless, feet, sometimes, somehow, get thrust and tangled; nets of disappointment, or difficult circumstances, or failing health, or narrowing income, or loss of heart to cope with daily ungenial duty, or innocent companionship changed to debasing thralldom, or some other hard or perilous condition, when one feels precisely as one does when his foot is caught and it seems beyond his strength to pull it out.
One day at a railway station, where there were many interlacing tracks, a foreman stood directing some needed repairs to the rails. A long black train approached, and he turned with his men to clear the way, when his heel was caught by a defective switch or frog, and held him fast as in a vice. With all the might of desperation he struggled to escape. His friends seized him and put forth their united strength to drag him away, or to break the terrible grip of the iron. All in vain. Lively effort was made to stop the train; but though the speed was checked the deadly wheels rolled slowly on, and there for one awful moment the helpless victim stood, with his agonised gaze fixed upon the creeping monster, until it touched him, bore him down, went grinding over him, and left him a mangled corpse.
How many nets for spiritual feet all about this world are just as unsuspected, just as powerful, and just as deadly as those jaws of steel that gripped that poor man to his death!
God be thanked for this note of faith and courage, a note for all timid and every soul ensnared. "Aime eyes are ever toward the Lord, for he shall pluck my feet from out the net."
Christian Herald.
