

MISCELLANEOUS.

A CLEVER OPERATOR.

[From the Toronto Globe.]

Some weeks ago, General Doyle, Commander of the Forces and Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, was accused in the streets of Fredericton by a tall, gentlemanly individual, of having stolen the General's hat. The stranger had the advantage of him in his features, having never been seen before or had passed from his Excellency's recollection. The stranger was not slow to make himself known. He was Col. Graham, recently Military Secretary to the Emperor Maximilian, but he had served some years before in the same regiment as the General. He had been present in the United Service Club when the General had made a brilliant speech, which he (Graham) had profited by many times since. To make a long story short, by the mention of persons and things, Colonel Graham managed to convince the General that he was a genuine individual who had served in the same regiment; he was invited to Government House, and being a well-informed, agreeable man, who had seen much of the world, he became a welcome guest in the best circles of New Brunswick's Capital. Governor Dundas, of Prince Edward Island, came to Fredericton on a visit, and was so charmed with Col. Graham, that he invited him to pay a visit to Charlottetown. The Colonel consented, but a serious difficulty presented itself. The English mail had not arrived, the Colonel had been previously disappointed in not receiving remittances, and expected all deficiencies to be made good by the next mail. In the meantime he could not accompany Governor Dundas; he told General Doyle's aide-de-camp, because he was afraid that, as a stranger, no banker would cash his draft. Gen. Doyle was consulted, and at once, with the generosity of a soldier towards an old comrade, told his aide-de-camp to introduce Col. Graham to a banker; and the Colonel, nothing loth, made a draft on his agent in England for £180 sterling, and so was enabled to make his projected trip to Prince Edward Island and visit Governor Dundas. But in Charlottetown he became impetuous again, and playing the same game skillfully, he made another haul of nearly the same amount. He left Prince Edward Island for Canada, bearing a letter of introduction from Mr. Dundas to Mr. Carter, who was very polite, as befitted his station and his disposition. He in turn gave Col. Graham a letter of introduction to His Excellency Governor Beloeux, at Quebec, and there again Col. Graham felt the necessity of making a draft on his London agents for £1500, which was cashed through the intervention of the arduous Lieutenant Governor. From Quebec Colonel Graham came to Toronto, but we have not heard that he obtained any money here. We are afraid that Toronto is not so hospitable to strangers as the more retired capitals of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec. The hero of our tale went from Toronto to one known whither, and all that remains to be told is that the drafts on the London agents have been returned, and that no one has yet been able to find a trace of Colonel Graham of Maximilian's army.

The famous Mrs. Yelverton being about to give readings in New York, the Herald suggested that she should read some of her own love letters to the major—letters which called forth the admiration of even the grave Lord Westbury. The lady thereupon sent the following very clever epistle to the Herald:—

I notice, in a recent number of the New York Herald, that in accordance with the practice of ancient and modern authors, I am about to give readings from my own writings. I must ask you kindly to correct the error, and try to explain that the "Yelverton Correspondence" alluded to is nothing more or less than the love letters written to my husband, Major Yelverton, prior and subsequent to our ill-starred marriage. They were written by the silvery moonbeams that light the shores of the classic Mediterranean, for one beloved eye alone, or by the still more mystic shores of the Bosphorus, in sight of the very Tower where Hero plied until Lander breathed the treacherous wave. They were the first outburst of a young heart, believing, with earnest faith, in all that is beautiful in God's creation—the first bloom of the plum; the first perfume of the bud, which after time destroys. Whatever their merits as literary productions, whatever their interest as epistolary effusions, I do not inquire. To me they are the only relics of "love's young dream" and now that the heart is broken and the object that they were addressed to—dead to me—a nameless wanderer, unknown, uncared for. Those letters are the sepulchre or funeral urn which contain the ashes of all that ever was, of all that ever can be, and it would seem like a desecration to me to expose them for the criticism or amusement of the public. True, they have been brought before the astonished gaze of bewigged lawyers to interpret, to the best or worst of their ability, according to the side they were engaged in. True, the two judges on the bench have been moved to tears in quoting them. True it is that most people have a facile comprehension of love letters, for the reason given by the brilliant French poet:—

Qui que se ains voit ton maitre
Et, si, il fut, on dit etc.

Those who have not been in love wish to ascertain precisely what it is like; those who have wish to renew, if only for a moment, the pleasant delusions. I shall be most happy to contribute these Elysian dreams by rendering, to the best of my ability, the loves of Heloise and Abbeard, or n'importe qui, but I always respect the green turf now growing over the grave of my own

HINTS FOR PEDESTRIANS.

There is no better or more natural exercise than walking, and none that is more shamefully neglected. The majority of people who live in cities, in choosing a residence, will take up with a poorer one at a higher cost, because it is three or five minutes nearer to their place of business, than a more comfortable one in the opposite direction would be the best possible thing for benefiting their health and their pocket. To one who knows the beauties of grove and field that may be discovered in the suburbs of almost any city, year after year, how many inhabitants can live, year after year, without venturing the slightest distance from their place of abode? A delightful suggestion is, in its original suggestion, to come to mean either going to a crowded watering place and being the slave of publicans, as long as the purse can stand it, or else being jolted to an omnibus down a dusty road, in the morning, to a bit of dirty water surrounded with beer shops, and going back as night "lead to death," and glad to get home.

Paris physician, Dr. Fauchon, has been studying the affections of the feet produced by walking, and the best means of preventing them. In addition to advice as to the shape of the boots, he recommends the repeated employment, during the march, of cold ablutions of the feet. Walkers, he says, should stop when they pass running streams or stagnant water long enough to take off their boots and to put their feet in water for a minute or a minute and a half. In incalculable places vessels of water may be procured for this purpose, and the feet kept in till the sensation of heat or burning has disappeared. If any blister form, a thread of wool or cotton should be passed through it, and loosely tied. Thus the fluid escapes, but the epidemia is preserved—a precaution by which severe subsequent pain is avoided. Excoriations are best treated by a soft oxide of zinc ointment (made with beezotized lard and a little glycerine). The shoes should be soft and supple, although sufficiently thick. A dozen or two small nails in the sole, where it wears most, suffice to preserve it. The leather may be softened by rubbing a mixture of linseed oil, turpentine, and oil of lavender. Stockings should always be worn.
