Dealing With the Criminal in Canada

Ottawa, Ont. (Canadian Press).—Canadian courts are drawing the net more closely round the criminal. That is one conclusion to be drawn from criminal statistics issued by the Bureau of Statistics of the Canadian Government.

The statistics cover the year ended Sept. 30, 1924, and are a compilation of convictions and acquittals in the various provinces. They do not deal with the unsolved mysteries of crime, but with cases actually in court. They show that in the 12 months ended last September convictions for indictable offences as against the previous 12 months corresponding increased from 15,188 to 16,258, while at the same time acquittals decreased from 4,551 to 4,409.

Expressed in percentages, convictions in indictable offences increased by seven per cent while acquittals decreased by six per cent.

Of the major crimes, there were 22 convictions for murder in the year ended September, 1924, as against 15 in the previous year; 1,558 convictions for burglary, house, warehouse and shop-breaking as against 1,176; 146 convictions for robbery and demanding with menace as against 132 and 14 convictions for highway robbery, exactly the same number as a year previous.

The tendency of Canadian courts to impose swift punishment in this following the lead of the British courts—is often cited as the explanation of the remarkable difference between the toll of crime in Canada and that in certain American cities. And in major offences especially has the tendency been noticeable. The Montreal bandits and their fate on the scaffold; the execution of the so-called "king of the bootleggers" in the Crow's Nest Pass case of the Rockies and a woman accomplice were cases in point.

In both these cases the death sentence was imposed not only on the one who actually fired the shot but also on the accomplice, for Canadian law regards the accomplice to a murder as being just as guilty as the murderer. The Code, too, provides only one penalty for murder, no matter in what part of Canada the crime may be committed, and that is the capital sentence. The sentence may be commuted by the Governor-General acting on the advice of the Cabinet, but commutation is only granted in exceptional cases.

In Parliament, session after session, there are pleas for abolition of the death sentence. But while abolition has found much support, the argument for the death sentence has always been that it is a deterrent to crime. On the last occasion that capital punishment came before the House of Commons, a motion favoring abolition was defeated by 52 to 22.

Huge System of Freight Subways is London Scheme

PLANNED TO LINK UP ALL RAIL TERMINALS WITH 60 MILES OF TRACK.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—A gigantic scheme to assist British trade which would involve the expenditure of $160,000,000 for its development is being proposed by an Anglo-American company, wishing to construct a vast network of freight railways underground run by electricity for London.

The capital for this gigantic concern is already being arranged through the co-operation of American and British banking houses.

The scheme would link up all the principal railway terminals of the metropolis and serve all the principal trade markets. It would carry about 60 miles of track and employ about 55,000 men for three years in its construction.

Experts figure that the waste today through the transport of freight and express through the streets of London amounts to over a million pounds a day. Under the proposed scheme a large portion of the traffic which travels above ground would be moved more rapidly under the city's surface.

Put London on Top.
It is stated confidently that such facilities would place London once more in an unrivalled position to handle overseas cargoes, much of which is now going to continental ports owing to the cumbersome methods of handling, and would thereby increase the distributing powers of London enormously and would add immeasurably to the city's trade and her commercial development.

While the scheme is admittedly an ambitious one, it receives the warmest welcome in the London press.

Eczema On Hands For Two Years Cuticura Healed

"For about two years I suffered with eczema on my hands. It started with small scales and then turned to a rash and was very sore and red. It itched terribly at times and kept spreading until my fingers were covered with it. I could not put my hands in water nor do any work. I did not get much sleep at night on account of the irritation. I used other remedies without much success. I saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised and sent for a free sample. After using it I purchased more and in a month's time I was completely healed." (Signed) Lawrence Chauvin, West Chazy, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1924.

"I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment my every-day toilet preparations and have a clear, sweet skin, soft smooth hands, and a healthy scalp with good hair. Cuticura Talcum is unexcelled in purity." "Jane Novak"

GIANT FEATURE CHARMS MAJESTIC PATRONS.

With a tender melody as its theme, harmony in its pictorial setting, and the splendid acting of Jane Novak as its topmost note, "The Lullaby," a Chester Bennett production which played at the Majestic Theatre, last night, proved to be a remarkable symphony of life portrayed in a truly masterful style by a cast of real artists.

As in all great musical creations, drawing the comparison farther, there is discord—but this only served to bring forth the beauty of the aria—a theme of consuming devotion and the final triumph of mother love.

Starting in a light, sparkling, jubilant tone, such as that carried by the string instruments in a great orchestra, the play runs gaily along until suddenly, with a threatening blare, the deep, brass notes of the French horns portend evil. Miss Novak, as the little Italian bride of a few months and her good-natured, devoted husband, played by Robert Anderson, carry a melody as it ships joyfully along until Fred Malatesta, as Tony, a wolf in disguise, takes the ominous solo, which swells to a crescendo, drowning out the tender lullaby. For a while, chaos reigns, the deep notes predominating. Then, gradually, the lullaby struggles to be heard, becomes louder and louder as the horns recede, and in a final swelling chorus, emerges triumphant in a splendid melodious finish.

"The Lullaby" must have been a good play for which to write the orchestration, for its movement is very similar to that of a great overture. Chester Bennett, its creator, should be called the "Wagner of the screen." He is not only a director, he is a composer.

Its great cast, including besides Miss Novak and Anderson, Otis Harlan, Fred Esmelton, Lydia Yeaman Titus and many others who contributed fine performances.

As already announced that in order to screen a series of super spectacles from now until further notice there will be three complete changes weekly at the Majestic: Mon., Wed. and Friday.

Patience Pays

"There are only a few investors," says John Moody, noted investment authority, in Fortune Magazine (N.Y.), "who seem to have the patience and the courage to resist the temptation of investing their money at the wrong time. They appear to think that if one waits before investing, worthwhile opportunities will surely slip by and that they will have lost their chance to get the best out of their capital."

"The investment market will always be with us and new opportunities for wise investment come along just as fast as old opportunities disappear."

Names of Inns in Old England and Their Origin

LONDON, August 30.—Why are the Bull inns and Bull hotels in all parts of England called "Bull"? The answer carries us back a long way in English history.

"Travellers, poor and rich alike, sought shelter in the monasteries in feudal times," writes Mr. D. C. Maynard in "The Old Inns of Kent" (Philip Allan).

"The numbers became so great that the religious houses were unable to cope with them. The difficulty was got over by establishing inns attached to the monasteries. And whenever we come across the sign of the Bull we shall not be far wrong in assuming that the inn which carries it was formerly connected with an ecclesiastical establishment."

In Kent.

"In fact we find a large number of important Bulls once owned by local abbots. As examples, there are the Bulls at Dartford, Rochester, Barking, Maidstone, and Hythe on the Medway, and those at Otford and Newington, near Sittingbourne—all in Kent."

"The term 'Bull' as an inn does not, as many suppose, refer to the animal. It derives from the Latin word hulls or seal, and signifies that an inn was licensed under the seal of the abbey. Most of these inns flourished under their ecclesiastical patronage, and often are still the most important inns in the neighbourhood, as at Rochester and Dartford."

"It has been suggested by some authorities that the monasteries were the first to introduce the principle of 'lodging houses.' However, this may be, it is quite indisputable that there were tied houses at quite an early date, for when one Thomas Drinkwater leased the Bear Inn at Southwark to James Bearn, flower in 1319, one of the terms of the lease stipulated that Bearn should purchase his liquor from Drinkwater."

Lighting Law

When Dame Nature Lets Off Her Fire-works, The Safest Place To Be In Is Bed.

Half a century ago every new building of any size was fitted with lightning conductors. Nowadays it is only church towers and tall chimneys that are so protected, and then with conductors very different from the old sort.

Increased knowledge has proved to us that the electricity in a heavy lightning discharge will not confine itself to the iron rods, wire cables, and other conductors which at one time were universal.

The modern lightning conductor is not made with the idea of drawing lightning, but with a view of quickly restoring the equilibrium between the electricity in the earth and that in the clouds.

Trees are the best natural conductors, and upon a day of thunder every twig and even every blade of grass acts as a conductor. Everyone knows that certain trees are more liable to be struck than others. The oak, for instance, is more often struck than the beech. The reason seems to be that trees with hairy leaves are better conductors than those with smooth leaves.

What One Flash Can Do.

The force of a single lightning flash is simply terrific—frequently so great that no conductor can have any effect whatever. A case in point occurred in July, 1915, when an explosive factory in Kent was struck.

This factory was fitted with lightning conductors of the most modern type in quite new condition, yet not only was the building destroyed, but a ton of nitro-cellulose dough, which was contained in hermetically sealed iron drums, blew up. According to recognized principles, these "hollow conductors" should have been absolutely impervious to lightning, and should have been beyond any risk of explosion.

Many people still believe the old saying that lightning never strikes twice upon the same spot. In point of fact, however, this is ridiculous, for there are places which have been struck not merely once or twice, but scores of times.

Only last year two houses near Brentwood, in Essex, were struck twice during the summer, and there is a house in Sussex which has been struck three times in two years. A hill on the northern edge of Dartmoor has been struck dozens of times, and there are kopjes in South Africa the rocky summits of which have been actually turned into slag by innumerable flashes of electric fire.

Safe in a Balloon!

The houses mentioned stand, it has been proved, on a substratum of ironstone, which is, of course, a conductor of electricity, while the hills, where the flashes are so frequent, are largely made up of ironstone.

It is worth while to mention that the most dangerous discharges are those which come towards the end of a storm, very often after a quite decided pause. Also, that the wetter you are, the less risk you run of being hurt or killed by lightning.

The safest place in a severe storm is in bed, especially if the mattress be

They are Content to Wait for a Four Like This Uncommon eagerness to own the new Chrysler Four indicates how far this latest Chrysler achievement is an advance over the usual standards of four-cylinder performance, appearance and value.

Never, perhaps, in history has a four-cylinder car been so heartily welcomed or so greatly desired.

The first showing of the Chrysler Four has attracted thousands to our show-rooms. Scores have placed orders, without demonstrations, after a first view of the car. So instantaneous has been its appeal that, already, public demand exceeds scheduled production.

It is especially significant of Chrysler value that buyers everywhere express their willingness to wait rather than purchase a car of lesser quality than the Chrysler Four.

Every facility of the great Chrysler plants is concentrated today on meeting the public demand for the desirable new Chrysler Four. Production is now running more than 500 quality cars a day, the greatest output of four-cylinder cars ever attained in a Chrysler plant.

Chrysler dealers today are making delivery with a rapidity not anticipated by the thousands who placed their orders content to wait until delivery could be made, knowing that a Chrysler Four is well worth waiting for.

We are eager to give you an immediate demonstration.

This was the New York and New Haven Railway in America. Passengers in a balloon are fairly safe—certainly much safer than those in an aeroplane, although the latter are in no special danger of being struck.
