CATTLE STEALER FREE; COMPANION GOT A STIFF SENTENCE

Judge Beck Finds Henry Hough Guilty and Lets him go on Suspended Sentence for Cattle Stealing; Hackman Gets Eighteen Months.

SENTENCE MAY BE ABSURDLY LENIENT

Men Were Hungry when Employer left them on Farm at Airdrie. Shot Heifer on Neighbor's Farm, made a Meal and Buried Remains.

Eighteen months is hardly what one would term a long sentence for cattle stealing, but it will doubtless appear such to Dusty Hackman, who is serving it out at the Barracks, while his companion in the crime, Henry Hough, is free on suspended sentence.

The latter sentence was the justice meted out by Mr. Justice Beck at the supreme court yesterday. The former was given by Judge Carpenter in the first week of February. There is something of irony about the case when it is learned that Hough, who goes free, is the man who fired the shot which killed the stolen beast.

Absurdly Lenient.

"Absurdly lenient" were the words which Judge Beck said would be applied to his sentence, but he declared himself more lenient to the first offender than any other judge on the bench, and at the same time more severe on the hardened miscreant. The man was young and he would have a chance, as evidence in his favor had given him a very excellent character.

The case goes back to the beginning of November last, when Hough, with Hackman and another young man, Fred Chapman, went out to a farm near Airdrie to engage for a man Stauffer to cut a crop of hay. The work was gone on with, when Stauffer and the man who owned the farm left and went to Calgary. The others continued the work, but Stauffer did not return. The provisions ran short. Then they got hungry, and Hough went out with Hackman to a neighbor's farm at night and shot down a heifer, which they took home, skinned, and ate some of the meat. The hide and head and entrails they buried in the stable. Next day they left for Calgary with a load of hay, which they sold when they found that Stauffer, who had employed them, had gone out of the country.

Buried Remains Found

No more was heard of the matter till January when Hooper, the man who had owned the heifer, with Sergeant Trundle of the Mounted Police and Chapman dug up the remains at the farm. Haskman was then arrested in Calgary, charged and sentenced on speedy trial by Judge Carpenter, who stated that it was an unusual instance of cattle stealing, as it was done in a mean way and the owner had only had a couple of calves and one was taken.

Hough was later arrested at his father's home in Provost and brought up for trial at the Supreme court yesterday. Chapman and Hackman were the witnesses who gave the evidence as recorded above. A. A. McGillivray, who appeared for the defense addressed the judge saying that as the only evidence was that of accomplices which was uncorroborated there was only one decision which could be given which was acquittal. Judge Beck thought that might be true to a certain extent but the evidence was direct and his only duty was to consider that the reliance on it was dangerous.

Exemplary Character

His Honor then proceeded to find the accused guilty. Yet before sentence was passed the counsel for the defence adduced the testimony of the father of the accused and a number of friends showing that he was but 19 years of age, and had up to the present borne an exemplary character.

The judge said he would be designated by many as absurdly lenient when he declared he would not commit the guilty man to jail. He would merely ask that his father and another would give bonds of $500 each for his good behavior for two years. He would give the man a chance. He had got his lesson and would probably now turn out a good citizen. The judge said he would not say the previous sentence was wrong but, had he been on the bench, he would have been more lenient in the circumstances.

The bond was then signed by the father and a friend of the guilty man and he was allowed to go, while Hackman was taken back by the Mounted Police to serve out his sentence at the barracks having still over a year to go.

CONVICT MADE PETS OF MICE

An Affectionate Farewell When the Prisoner Was Transferred

London, Eng., May 28.—An interesting story of a convict and his two pet mice is told in the report of Captain Hanson, the prison commissioner of London.

Captain Hanson, said the convict, who was imprisoned at Pankhurst jail had two pet mice, but was ordered to another prison, where he was unable to keep his pets. Captain Hanson promised to have them cared for and himself went to the cell for the mice.

"Never shall I forget the parting scene," continued the officer. "The man took each of the mice, calling them by name, kissed them, and then put them in a little box he had lined with flannel, and with them a piece of bread and a piece of cheese he had saved."

Fishermen from New England ports are charged with selling mackerel with bottles of whisky in their insides to thirsty citizens in the local option districts of Lower Delaware. In Maine it has been discovered that some dealers are making money by bringing in whiskey powders that turn into the genuine article when emptied into a glass of water. In Ontario for some time past there has been quite a business in concentrating essences of an alcoholic nature. It is a severe prohibition law that keeps the craver after intoxicating beverages from satisfying his appetite. The scientists may in time make it possible for a man to carry around his own bar in his vest pocket.—Vancouver Sun.
