London, Jan. 2. - Lord Rosebery's famous Chesterfield speech has been issued in book form with the following interesting prefatory note by the au-thor: "I publish this with much reluctance, for it is not a speech, but a skel-eton. The ordinary limits of such an occasion, even though in this instance shamelessly exceeded, allowing no time to expand or to clothe, so that it is only a bare colloquial statement. Such as it is, however, I must issue it myself, or it would be printed by others without even the mild supervision that I can afford. Let me say another word of the policy of the speech as apart from the form. That policy appears to have received a large meed of general approval. But political opinion, to be effective, must be organized. Political energy must work and entrench. I want some of this spadework on be-The United States navy department half of this policy, or else the wave of popular adhesion will be lost in space.' The only conclusion that can reasonably be drawn from this note is that, in spite of all statements to the con-trary, Lord Rosebery intends to follow up the advantage that he secured at Chesterfield. It is noteworthy that his speech is published, not as a Liberal policy, but as a national policy.

Each year the company sets out a big spreud, and an evening of mirth and merriment follows, when every man is at his ease, and the hearty goodwill that exists among all the employes of the company is manifested. This was the most successful gathering that the company has yet had in its existence of over 50 years.

Devotions were in progress at the time in the chapel, and Bishop James McGoldrick was just pronouncing the benediction when the explosion occurred. Fragments of the boller came up through the floor, and every window in the entire structure was completely shattered.
