Sew the Easiest Way—
With 3-in-One oil

This pure light oil flows freely into every bearing and friction point of every make of sewing machine. It works out all dirt, reduces friction to a minimum, and makes handwheel, treadle and shuttle work smoothly, noiselessly, easily.

3-in-One oil Never "Gums". The grease in common oils collects dirt and grinds into the bearings, wearing out your machine and causing great heat. Brings away dirt and all so called "fish oil". Sticks to all parts of the sewing machine oil on canvas.

A little 3-in-One oil on a soft cloth cleans and polishes the wooden case, and also absolutely prevents rust on the metal parts.

For sale at all good hardware, drug, grocery and stationery stores. 3 oz. 25c. 6 oz. 45c. 1 lb. $1.00.

PIMPLES BROKE OUT AROUND CHIN

Burst and Formed Ugly Soabs. Burning, then Itching. Had to Go Without Shaving for Weeks. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Skin Perfectly Clear.

181 Close St., Toronto, Ont.—"I was troubled with facial eczema for nearly ten years. The first signs were pimples breaking out and then burning and forming nasty ugly soabs around my chin. Very often the sensation was that of burning, then itching so that I scratched the sore. I had to go without shaving for weeks at a time. I tried many patent remedies but patient found a permanent cure. Every spring and fall the disease appeared at its worst. I sometimes got rid of it for a few months, then it returned as bad as ever.

"About six months ago I received a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and found great relief after a few applications. I purchased two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap and used them as directed and now my skin is perfectly clear. I can shave with pleasure." (Signed) Wm. MacBean, May 27, 1912.

Not only is Cuticura Soap and Ointment most valuable in the treatment of eczema and other distressing eruptions of skin and scalp, but no other eczema so much for pimples, blackheads, red, rough skins, itching, scaly soabs, dandruff, dry, thin and falling hair, chapped hands and shapeless nails, nor do it so economically. A single cake of Cuticura Soap (25c.) and box of Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are often sufficient. When all else has failed, Sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post card Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 43D, Boston, U. S. A.

No Other Way

BY GORDON HOLMES.

Author of "A Mysterious Disappearance,"
"The House of Silence," Etc.

He seemed to abandon some project he was entertaining, and asked the women, with a smile, whether they preferred the window open or shut.

All this, of course, was excellent footing. Clancy meanwhile was peering after the porter, en route to the telephone office. "The lady who gave you the telegram," he gasped, "is she the same?"

"She is not sure. If she has written 'Peena,'"

"The man obeyed instantly, and Clancy owned the man quicker pair of eyes.

"Yes, it's all right—thank you," he said, and made the imperative command to John Stratton Terrie.

"Follow me to Atlantic City by next train without fail. Most important. Wire."

Now, neither he nor Steingall had agreed on a course of action. They had seen Mrs. Delamar prepare to send off a message, and Clancy had skipped to the end of the corridor without a word. The remainder of the comedy was merely the working of two trained artists, each could trust the other to do exactly the right thing. When Clancy gave Steingall the text of the telegram, his chief did not even trouble to tell him how he had brought Mrs. Delamar from the window at the psychological moment.

"The district attorney's deputy," he said, "has a section all to his lonesome 'Captains' said. Steingall and they gathered up their baggage, including the square case.

"The good woman caught Mrs. Delamar's eye again.

"Those men must be detectives," she said. "I remember the name of Forbes as appearing for the district attorney. Don't you wish they had brought him here?"

"Why?" demanded Mrs. Delamar, forcing a smile.

"Because they are extraordinarily open-spoken, and it is so interesting to listen to the conversation of such people. I suppose this Absecon murder will be all in the papers tomorrow or Thursday."

"Murder?" Mrs. Delamar's voice sounded somewhat shocked. "Why do you call it murder?"

"Oh, the district attorney would not take it up otherwise. I know a little about these matters. My husband used to be connected with the department."

"But, if I recall the incident correctly, there was an inquest. I think the poor man was supposed to have died from heart disease while sailing his yacht."

"You mark my words, there is more in it than can be seen; though, for the life of me, I cannot imagine why that queer little man gave his friend such a lecture about it, and before us, too."

"I am going to Atlantic City—they mention that place, didn't they?"

"Absecon, wasn't it?"

"Yes, perhaps it was. But the inquest was held at Atlantic City, I fancy."

"So it was."

"Well," and Mrs. Delamar languidly reopened her writing-case, "as I have had plenty of time to read the papers while in a chair on the board walk, I may hear more of it."

The other woman was well acquainted with Atlantic City, and was half inclined to put leading questions, but, being a well-bred person, refrained, and the opportunity passed.

While the detectives were making for Forbes' locality, Steingall saw Waverton sitting dejectedly in an intervening car. With him was a respectable looking person with an inch of dark whisker beneath the chin.

Clancy grinned. He, of course, had discovered Steingall's presence during his earlier transit.

"A nice bunch of sleuths we are!" growled Steingall, "but they were out of our line. Here is our bird in this train, and we never flushed him!"

"Name of good old gray man!" smirked Clancy. "What a lark if he had come into our car and Mrs. Delamar's! But I'm mighty glad he didn't."

"I should like to know just why you say that," muttered Steingall.

"Because he is under suspicion, and he is such a real good fellow. Makes you feel sort of ashamed of yourself for regarding him as a villain. Is that how it strikes you, Steingall?"

"I am not quite sure yet that he is a villain," said the chief inspector. "The Waverton case has taken on a few peculiar kinks during the last fortnight, and it may have a twist or two in store."

"Yes, if Waverton is Scott, he has committed offences enough already to keep him in Clancy'ssing for the rest of his natural life. Queer how we sympathize with him. Ah, here is Forbes."

"Mrs. Delamar might have seen Waverton either at New York or on arriving at Atlantic City, but she gave no sign of the knowledge. If she possessed it, she was driven to one of the large hotels, found a telegram awaiting her there, went to her room, dressed and took, she telephoned to the police station and went out."

Hence it happened that a small cove of officialdom at another hotel was interrupted by a waiter.

"Mr. Steingall," he inquired.

"Yes," said Steingall.

"Lady to see you, sir."

"Ah!" He exchanged glances with Clancy.

"Toujours cherchez la femme!" laughed the latter.

"This time the femme is cherechezing me. You come, too."

"Who is it?" demanded Forbes, realizing from the manner of the two men that the call was on business.

"Mrs. Delamar, for a five-spot," said Steingall.

And it was!

CHAPTER XIII.

Waverton Shows Fight.

The meeting between Mrs. Delamar and the representatives of the bureau ended in the tamest imaginable way. The woman had come to give information, and, having regard to the calibre of the men opposed to her, it was explicable to expect nothing more than to achieve her object. She used all the feminine arts save the candor of innocence; but, unlike the rest of her class, she was not a hypocrite. She was a woman of the world, and she knew that the only way to win was to win.

"Mrs. Delamar, I could not have overheard what you gentlemen were saying to each other today," she said, coolly enough, "and I had some duty restraining me from interfering in your conversation. Why are the authorities in New York interested in themselves in my husband's death? It seems to have arisen from natural causes, and the only strange element about it was the fact that he died in the cutter and was carried out to sea."

"You will hear the medical evidence tomorrow, madam," said Steingall. "I cannot tell you just what conclusion the doctors have arrived at, but am sure they will greatly modify any views you may have formed as the outcome of the first day's inquest."

"We do not allow ourselves the luxury of theories. We go only on ascertained facts."

"But I, at any rate, can have little of value to tell you. I am a layman, and I hope you will answer fully and carefully all the questions the district attorney will put to you."

"A barely perceptible pause to allow Clancy to break in if so minded.

"If the gentlemen attach so much importance to the affair, as to send all you gentlemen from New York, I suppose I ought to have legal assistance too," and the low-toned, well-modulated voice gave away itself to a lawyer.

"You are your husband's sole legatee, madam, and consequently the person most closely concerned."

"Yet I cannot see how my interests are threatened. There is no question of life insurance, or of sort of thing."

"By this time Steingall knew that his colleague meant to leave Mrs. Delamar to her own devices, and he realized that she fancied herself secure in the role of a distressed widow. How could he harbor such a delusion? In view of Clancy's earlier references to Claude Waverton, passed his comprehension. But then, women were women, and Clancy often adopted the fabled policy of the ostrich, and refuse to recognize the awkward truth until it was passed under his feet. He could picture himself, too, being cross-examined by an adroit lawyer, and forced to admit that he had wrong compromising statements from a suspect under the guise of a friendly chat; so he determined to bring the conversation to a close.

"You are the best judge of your own interests," he said. "I can only assure you that the circumstances attending Mr. Kyle's death will be gone into thoroughly, and, seeing that a legal expert will represent the police, you ought to be protected by a lawyer."
