LUMBERJACK SAVED HIS HORSES

Unnamed Voyageur Dives Fifteen Feet to Loosen Chains From Horses.

PORT ARTHUR, Feb. 20.—Once more the "untutored voyageur of the wild" has proved his humanity, his courage and his resource. A logging teamster—as yet "unnamed in dispatches"—is reported for an act of bravery unprecedented in the years of lumbering in the backwoods of North Ontario. He is an employee of the New Ontario Construction Company engaged in hauling logs across Lake Larson to the Canadian Government Railway near Sioux Lookout.

Under a load of 106 logs the ice cracked and broke. The man leaped to safety. The logs floated. Horses and heavily chained sleigh were drawn down and sank. At the risk of his life the teamster plunged into the icy water of the lake to a depth of fifteen feet, and after a hard and numbing struggle, freed his horses. Looming from his load, the teamster removed his heavy mackinaw and plunged in headfirst, grasping the chain fastening, unlocked it and rose to the surface, clinging to the harness of the horses. Scrambling up on the ice edge again, the teamster supported the heads of the horses above water and called for help. With his soaked garments rapidly freezing in the below zero temperature he clung to the animals until assistance came. Both horses were removed.
