

THE TORONTO MAN.

CHATELAIN WAS THE FRENCHMAN. It was in the bay of Toulon on board the Russian frigate L'Albatros.

While in the company of several French naval officers, I made the acquaintance of some officers belonging to the Russian man-of-war, and the latter had invited me, the only civilian at the banquet, to the banquet given in honor of my friends of the squadron.

The Russians are strong-headed drinkers, as everybody knows, but their officers partake in this respect and it is well understood among French naval folk that an invitation to visit any of the Czar's vessels means to indulge in libations that will last for a long time.

On the evening referred to things went on in the usual style. The banquet had been exquisite, and was admirably served; the company had eaten a great deal, drank very freely, and talked very much.

anchored there in the most peaceful, untroubled way. At that moment I felt my heart beating fast... I was certain of success. My men were on edge, ready to follow me to the ends of the earth.

"I shall not leave you," said Mrs. Brown, "I shall stay with you until you are well again. I shall be your nurse and your comforter."

"No, no, no," said Mrs. Brown, "I shall not leave you. I shall stay with you until you are well again. I shall be your nurse and your comforter."
