Poetry. A LITTLE WHILE. Beyond the smiling and the weeping I shall be soon; Beyond the waking and the sleeping, Beyond the sowing and the reaping, I shall be soon.

Poetry. Beyond the blooming and the fading I shall be soon; Beyond the shining and the shading, Beyond the hoping and the dreading, I shall be soon.

Poetry. Beyond the frost chain and the fever I shall be soon; Beyond the rock waste and the river, Beyond the ebb and the ebb, I shall be soon.

Select Literature. A Smuggler in spite of Himself. BY F. W. SAUNDERS. 'When I was a younger like yourself, said Grummett, laying aside his pipe, and taking a comfortable position for a year, when I was a younger like yourself, I was troubled with a chronic and irremediable desire to see the world.

Poetry. 'What do you say to a little sail down the harbor? I've a boat waiting for me at the stairs by the old church; there are several little mares that I want to attend to down below, and besides there is a fine lounge outside, waiting for a crew. I've some notion of going in her myself, and there'll be a chance for you, too, if you like. We will have a squint at her as we come along back.'

Poetry. 'I have no one going beside yourself I asked, without any person into a scrape from which he might find it difficult to get out of the conversation.' 'Yes, there are a couple of chaps waiting in the boat now.'

Poetry. 'No—I reckon not,' he replied, 'but that needn't make any difference—they are bricks, both of them.' 'Having nothing else to occupy my time, I consented to make one of the party, and we walked rapidly toward the stairs, Harry Williams, who had, as I before remarked, been a former shipmate of mine—was a tall, finely-built fellow, over whose handsome face a good natured smile constantly flitted, and which required only the least little bit of provocation to increase to a merry and very catching laugh. He was an excellent seaman, and his imperious good humor, his willingness to oblige, and his contempt of danger, won him hosts of friends wherever he went; notwithstanding all these good qualities, however, I was in consequence of the time—he was not the man to whose guidance a very cautious man would yield himself implicitly. He was of good nature, and self-impulsively. He was of good nature, and self-impulsively.

Poetry. 'I shall be soon; Beyond the waking and the sleeping, Beyond the sowing and the reaping, I shall be soon. Love, rest and home! Sweet hope! Lord, tarry not, but come. Beyond the blooming and the fading I shall be soon; Beyond the shining and the shading, Beyond the hoping and the dreading, I shall be soon. Love, rest and home! Sweet hope! Lord, tarry not, but come. Beyond the frost chain and the fever I shall be soon; Beyond the rock waste and the river, Beyond the ebb and the ebb, I shall be soon. Love, rest and home! Sweet hope! Lord, tarry not, but come.

DETERMINED-ON-DEATH. TWO WOMEN AND THREE MEN RESPECTABLY REPEATING ATTEMPTS AT SUICIDE. From the New York World. Agnes Agnew, a Scotch girl twenty-five years of age, applied at the Prince Street station for lodging last night, and was sent down to the lodging room. About an hour afterwards she tried to strangle herself with a piece of calico. The officer took the strip of calico away from her, and ran back to tell the sergeant to telegraph for the doctor. When he returned to the room he found the girl rubbing her throat across the edge of the red-hot stove. She had succeeded in burning herself badly but not dangerously. She was formerly employed as a servant at No. 141 Lexington avenue, but had lately been acting so strangely that they discharged her. It appears that she lost her mother about a year ago, and since that time her mind has been unsteady. She was taken to the Chambers Street Hospital.

Mary E. Nicholl tried to jump into the East River at the foot of Broome street yesterday but was prevented and arrested for drunkenness. In the Delaney Street Station House she tried to strangle herself with her handkerchief. Yesterday morning as the ferry boat Brookline happened to go into the room and found him with a shawl tied around his neck, hanging from one of the clothes racks. When cut down he was almost strangled. An ambulance was sent for and he was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Last evening a well-dressed man about thirty years of age, while crossing from Brooklyn to this city on one of the South Ferry boats, attempted to jump overboard, but was prevented by one of the deck hands. He was landed over to the police, and at the New Street Police Station gave his name as John Smith, and said he was a law reporter. In his pockets letters were found addressed to J. B. Beveridge, 12 Lafayette avenue, Brooklyn. About twenty minutes after he was locked up he was found hanging by his suspenders and was cut down. Half an hour later an officer heard a strange noise in the cell, and investigation showed the would-be-suicide again suspended, having this time used the leg of his trousers. An officer was placed in the cell to watch him.

On 10.30 last night James H. Dunn of No. 233 West Eighteenth street, while in a saloon at No. 220 West Eighteenth street, snatched a razor from the hand of Charles Trautwin, and attempted to cut his throat. He was prevented from carrying out his intention, but freeing himself from the grasp of those who were holding him, inflicted a wound eight inches long on his left breast. He said all his friends had deserted him. He was taken to the New York Hospital.

A notable instance of hospitality being rewarded has just occurred at Invergreen, whereby an old widow has inherited a small fortune. Some three years ago an old man, in apparently poor circumstances, while travelling through Ross-shire, called at the widow's house in question, and asked for a cup of tea. This she hospitably gave. He then asked to be allowed to remain in the house over night. This, too, she did not refuse to grant. On departing next morning, quite unexpectedly he insisted on his entertainer accepting a pound note. With some reluctance she consented. His parting words were that he would never forget the kindness he had received. Shortly after a letter containing another sum of money was received by the widow from the stranger, and at short intervals afterwards, other and larger sums continued to be forwarded from the same source. Not many days ago the Free Church minister at Invergreen received a telegram from a lawyer in one of the east coast towns requesting search to be made for the old lady, and it turns out that her guest, who has died, and who appears to have had no near relatives, has left his property—considered to be worth several hundreds of pounds—to her.

Daniel Gallagher, a young New Yorker of nineteen years, has such a mania for attending funerals that he reads the death notices in the papers as regular as a woman's hair. He has a memorandum book in which he enters all particulars about the ceremonies. He is at the undertaker's before the funeral is driven away assists in whatever he can without pay, and happens, and then coming to the cemetery in advance of the hearse. After the burial he hastens back to the city to attend another funeral if his book announces another for that day. His mother says that Daniel is light in the upper story; that like a singer though apparently without purpose; and is as fond of attending wakes as funerals.
