ef cannon. After a very heavy firing on both fides, Dalton, perceiving that the place was no longer tenable against fo much bravery, capitulated for the immediate retreat of his whole garrifon; and the request having been acceeded to, about one o'clock they departed, with great precipitation, through the Porte de Namur. But as all the foldiers are not equally inclined to follow him at the moment this is writing they are squabbling among themselves without the city. Already we have got more than 3,000 prisoners; but sew killed, and no houses plundered.

When I had the pleafure of communieating the taking of Bruffels last post, the news had just arrived here in general terms; and every one naturally imagined that the victory had been purchased by general Vander Meis, with his main army Ethermore so, as it was reported the day before, that they were within three leagues of Bruffels;) but upon the arrival, fince then, of the particulars, it affords matter of surprife, that General d'Alton thould have permitted the inhabitants of litusfels. to saly to have driven him away with his whole garrison. No doubt the apprehen-Sons of Vander Meis's immediate arrrival; with his forces, was the only cause of his surrendering the city; which it would have been impracticable to defend, when a free passage was opened for their entrance during the term of the armiflice.

Count Trautmanido if finding that the Emperor's last proclamation of amnesty failed, like the former. in its effects, published, two other declarations to this purport. The first regretted the little fuecels which attends the paternal fentiments of tenderness of his Majesty towards his people; and imputed it to the want of his express guarantee for the performance of the stipulations therein contained; that Minister therefore, addently desiring that the public tranquility and allegiance Chould be reftored, and unwilling to nega Rect an opportunity which might rest with him for the accomplishment of so defirables as perpofe, takes, upon himfelf to pledgeshis word of honor, and to become a full and unreferved guarantee for all the propofals made in his Majefly's faid pubheations. no The letter fignifies, that, hasing a full confidence in the loyalty and good conduct of the citizens of Bruffels, he thus directed the trenches thrown open in the Arects, to be filled up, and the arms to be again put into their hands for their own defence as before. Thele orders have been accordingly put into execution; and the event of them has been, that the Burgesses have used their arms in the assertion of their liberties and privileges, as before described.

What measures the main army under General Yander Meis may take on account of this victory, will perhaps transpire against next post.

One of the Members of the Etat de Brabant prefented last week to the Assembly, a plan of accommodation between the Emperor and the Patriots. The most important substance of his proposals was as follows, confishing of 35 articles: That all privileges, immunities, &c. mould be restored in the different Provinces. to put it out of the sovereign's power, to exercife any unducinfluence with the states' individually, no Province fliguld, of itself, grant any sublidy.
