

MCGILL UNIVERSITY

February 8, 1935.

Dear Mr. Beatty,

May I call your attention to the series of editorials appearing in the DAILY during the past few days, particularly to the tone of the last one, which seems to imply that because of professorial bickerings which have reached the students, they are losing their respect for professors. I don't know who has inspired or written this series of editorials, but there is a striking difference in their style and tone to anything which has appeared in the DAILY for a good many years, in fact so different are they that one would doubt that they are of student composition.

Yours faithfully,

E. W. Beatty, Esq., K.C., LL.D.,
Chancellor,
McGill University
