Word received last night from the Mesopotamian front speaks of the great impediment caused to the rapid progress of the British relief expedition to Kut-el-Amara. A hurricane raged four days and the waters of the Tigris have risen four feet, and they are the color of red brick. Severe fighting continues, despite the rains. Among those killed were the Turkish general, Bekirsamy Bey, former governor of Tripoli.

The story of Sir Max Aitken concerning the operations of the Canadians at the front, issued for publication last night, makes good reading. It tells of the growing superiority of Canadian shells over the German, of the preponderance in metal being on the right side of the battle front. The enemy is now harassed by a fire from which it is difficult for him to escape, and to which it is impossible for him adequately .o reply. The inferiority in munitionment has disappeared. But when one comes to think of it, an output of 20,000 shells a day when Lloyd George took hold of the munitions campaign was not so bad as it looks, for the British then held only 24 miles of front, and their regular army was reinforced only by a few divisions. But the German and Austrian output, which it was stated was a quarter of a million shells a day, was distributed over 1500 miles of front. or sixty times the front then held by the British army, so that, per mile of front held, the British army was better supplied with shells than the German.

. From Russia few military details are permitted to reach the outer world, owing to a sudden tightening of the censorship, which was first observable six or seven weeks ago. In the north the Germans have settled down in a line of trenches which they are endeavoring to strengthen against the day when they will have to fight with great endurance against the Russians on the offensive. The Russians have enlarged their forces and have a greater supply of rifles and equipment than they ever had, but they remain inactive, with the exception of artillery bombardment, probably owing to the extreme coldness of the weather and to the certainty that their new troops will be much better supplied with equipment by March and be able to advance in overwhelming numbers. * .

The Russian centre is not so quiescent, but it is from the Russian left wing that great details of activity are heard from the Austrians, who keep on reporting the repulse of Russian attacks. Petrograd is generally silent, but for the occasional reporting of the carture of an Austrians will be methods employed. "I recognize also that the destrucon reporting the repulse of Russian attacks. Petrograd is generally silent, but for the occasional reporting of the capture of an Austrian sector of trenches or so. In proportion as the Russian reports grow meagre, it may be surmised that they are doing the more. The attacks in Bessarabia naturally suggest their influence on the Balkan situation. Roumania's support may be nearer securing than some people surmise, and the payment of fifty millions in British gold for her grain crop the other day is suggestive of the reaching of a good understanding there. The ability of the allies to pay our army is mobilized; this has caus-that much down in gold, while the Germans are unable to pay for the grain ed in gold or manufactured goods is bound to create an impression among the rendering you any conceivable ser-Roumanians that the allies are much the stronger after seventeen months of war. . .

The growing feeling in Roumania that the allies are coming along stronger than the central powers is creating its counter-feeling of uneasiness in Sofia, where alarming reports about Greece, with the Germans and Austrians powerless to help her, are also stirring up unrest, but no indication has yet come thru that the Bulgarians yet realize what the allies are going to do to them. . .

The Russian activity, about which the Austrian official reports are so voluble, may be closely associated with Roumania. The map reveals Roumania as extending from the Black Sea to Bukowina and Transylvania, in shape like an immense kidney. At the northeastern end the Russians are at present conducting operations. But at the southeastern end, where the natural route of invasion of Bulgaria lies, thru the Dobrudja, along the valley of the Danube, everything is quiet. But to guard against an advance in this direction the enemy has to keep considerable forces of troops on the watch inside of Bulgaria. If, under stress of Russian pressure, he is forced to remove them to Bukowina, the chance for a Russian sweep down the Danube into Bulgaria will come. The situation puts the enemy in a predicament from which there is no easy way out.

The Germans are given another chance to reflect on the increased vulnerability that they have brought on themselves thru the extension of their lines to Constantinople by the allied bombardments of Dedeaghatch washed off mornings, will gradually im-prove the worst complexion. The who coddles herself all day in an everheated house and finds her skin much and Portos Lagos. At the second point the allied warships landed marines after shelling it for two days, and these, after scouting around, came across a large body of the enemy and then retired to their ships.
