

IRISH LEADER AT HIS HOME

A Call on Redmond in Heart of Wicklow Mountains

WILD, PICTURESQUE SPOT

Union Jack and Irish Flag Fly Above His Residence - High Hope and Confidence in The Future of His Country

(London Chronicle.) It was a bright, sunny autumn morning when I set forth from Dublin for John Redmond's residence in the heart of the Wicklow mountains. I was accompanied by an old friend, who happens also to be a friend of the Irish leader. From Dublin to Aughavanagh is about fifty miles, but our good motor-car ate up the distance with lively relish. The roads were excellent, though from time to time we struck some dusty patches, each with its little plot of land, the ruddy-faced, well-shod children—all testify to a rural community in good health and very distinctly on the upgrate.

There is too little tillage; there are still too many indications of a manless land. But the snug farms and well-tended fields, the solid and cheerful-looking laborers' cottages, each with its little plot of land, the ruddy-faced, well-shod children—all testify to a rural community in good health and very distinctly on the upgrate.

This is the home of Mr. Redmond! Situated on rising ground in the very heart of the valley it occupies a commanding position. Except for a farmhouse on the lower slope of one of the surrounding hills, there is no other sign of human habitation. Half a mile or so to the rear of the house Lagavone, the highest mountain in Ireland, rises in austere beauty to a height of 8,500 feet. Other lofty peaks, though not so bold or so challenging, are to right and left and in front of Lagavone. Through the valley the river Dw meanders down its stony bed. The air here is keen and bracing. No wonder, for Aughavanagh is 400 feet above sea-level.

A wild, picturesque spot, with a stern alluring beauty that haunts the memory when absent and fills the heart with a longing to return to it. The very place for moral and physical rejuvenation. How often in the course of a weary parliamentary session Mr. Redmond must long for the healing breezes that blow down from these mountains and for that daily plunge into the fresh clear water of the Dw, which he never misses when he is here.

Aughavanagh was built as barracks for the English soldiers during the rebellion of 1798. For years the late Charles Stewart Parnell used it as a shooting-box. Many are the reminiscences of the dead chief at a luncheon and a shot. Mr. Redmond has by degrees transformed the rambling old building into a delightful abode. Like Parnell he loves a day's shooting, and is seldom so happy as when he goes forth in those hills with a gun and a dog. Aughavanagh is a sportsman's paradise. The house is full of sporting trophies. There is a record of fame and wrong and awful human suffering in the history of English rule in Ireland. The marvel is that the race survived. But there is an indestructible vitality in the Celt, and the Irish of today are living proofs of it. Enough of sad memories. The old era

MEN IN THE WAR GAME

Gen. von Hindenburg

This is the quiet, forceful man of the Kaiser's general staff. He is General von Hindenburg, the fierce leader who is fighting against the Russians in East Prussia.

When it is said that this army of the Kaiser is commanded by no less a personage than the brilliant Gen. Rennenkampf, von Hindenburg becomes doubly conspicuous, for on Rennenkampf Russia largely depends to force an entrance into the German Empire.

Capable and resourceful, a stern disciplinarian, this German leader retains wondrous control over his army and his ability to move his men quickly lies the secret of his success.

The Kaiser firmly believes that decisive defeat or victory on this side will end the war, so he has chosen von Hindenburg to make it victory.

THE SARDINE CATCH

John F. Calder, inspector of fisheries, states that the catch of sardine herring in his district during the month of September was valued at $100,000 in Charlton county and $40,000 in St. John county. This must be regarded as a very satisfactory showing, being within about 10 per cent of the value of the catch in the two counties during the whole of the season of 1913.

CANADA IN THE WAR

An investigation is being made by the Ottawa authorities as to the number of Germans and Austrians in Canada. The object is the consideration of placing them together in concentration camps throughout Canada to employ them in some sort of government work in order to defray the cost of their maintenance. Col. Sam Hughes is now planning to leave for Canada after having completed to his satisfaction his arrangements with the Canadian troops. He and Col. Wilson were guests of Lord Roberts at dinner last week and on Monday visited Sir Charles Tupper, who has three grandsons and a grandson-in-law with the Canadian contingent. The minister has been to the arrangement of canteens at the Canadian camp.

The sum of $121 was realized at a meeting of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, held last evening by Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Burden at 141 Exchange street. Burden has given ten pigs to the soldiers at Partridge Island to fatten and sell for the fund and will give ten more at Christmas.

Ottawa, Oct. 22—Official announcement was made tonight of the promotion of Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes to the rank of major general dating back to May 1912 and of Col. Gwatkin, chief of the general staff, to the same rank. A scheme is being considered by the militia department for sending with the Canadian contingents a strong engineering corps of experienced bridge-builders and bridge-repair men. There would also be a corps of electricians for such a corps to meet the damage done by the retreating armies through destroying bridges to cover the retreat.

Montreal, Oct. 22—Owing to the large number of Austrians and Germans in this city, the board of control this morning decided to send a deputation to Ottawa to ask the federal government to take steps relative to the protection of Montreal against any attempt to commit damage on the part of enemies located in the city.
