

THE PRUDENCE OF SAVING.—The prudence of saving may almost be called self-evident. Illness, misfortune, the opportunity of an eligible purchase, putting out children into the world, the inevitable growth of expenditure as we advance in life, the immense comfort of a secret provision for emergencies, are quite sufficient in themselves to justify and reward the thrift that springs from self-denial, apart from the distinct motive of laying by for accumulation, which it may or may not be right to do. Though it may not tell directly upon our habits of benevolence, and in many cases it will not, in quite as many more it will indirectly, though promoting self-restraint, and placing additional means at our disposal. For if we are poor through what we miss as well as through what we lose, we are rich through what we save as much as through what we gain. By all means let us admit that the habit of saving has a dangerous side to it; that to save merely to keep is quite a different thing from saving that we may give away; and that where pride, or stinginess, or covetousness, are at the bottom of it, it is but selfishness in a specious form. No one is rich who lives beyond his income, but every one may be said to be so who lives within it.

A crusty old bachelor says the talk of women is usually about men. Even their laugh is but "he! he!"

A picture framer who has quite as much business as he can attend to, says the hardest work he has to do is to "frame excuses."

In one of the suburban schools a school inspector gave out the word "paster" to a class for spelling. It was a perfect still till it reached the foot of the class, when a curly-headed little fellow spelled it correctly, but, being asked to define it, he shouted out, "Moresault."

A WIFE'S POWER.—The power of a wife, for good or evil, is irresistible. Without one, home must be forever unknown. A good wife is to a man wisdom, strength and courage; a bad one is confusion, weakness, and despair. No condition is hopeless to a man where the wife possesses firmness, decision and economy.
