(Continued from Page 1.) facture in Ontario of beer of a greater alcoholic content than two and a half per cent. for export to other provinces where its sale is prohibited.

Frank criticism of bone-dry prohibition came from Dr. Blake, member for North Winnipeg, who asserted that there has been too much control of the action of the people and that "prohibition was the straw which had broken the camel's back, and precipitated unrest in the country."

Dr. Blake was convinced that much of the industrial unrest was due to restraints put upon the people by the war. The war itself was a matter of great restraint. There had been food control and other controls, and he believed that prohibition was the straw which had broken the camel's back and precipitated unrest in the country. In his view, tea and tobacco were doing more harm in the land today to the mentality and physique of the people than liquor was doing, because they were more generally used.

Dr. Blake declared that the W. C. T. U. and other temperance organizations were touring the country on prohibition and a great majority of their members had never had a drink. Insofar as the province of Manitoba was concerned, prohibition had resulted in the establishment of numerous stills. At first, after prohibition came into force, there had been a decrease in crime, but crime was now on the increase. This was probably due partly to the fact that people were drinking inferior liquor turned out by illicit stills. The people needed liquor and they were going to have it.

The influenza epidemic, said Dr. Blake, was a powerful argument against total prohibition. Whisky was necessary for its medicinal value. Out in Manitoba, as a result of prohibition, people who are liquor would be sold. The immense drugstore charges as much as $11 for a bottle of whisky. As a solution of the problem, Dr.

CHAPTER IV.

A Vanishing Gleam

Mr. Tulliver, even between the fits of spasmodic rigidity which had recurred at intervals ever since he had been found fallen from his horse, was usually in so apathetic a condition that the exits and entrances into his room were not felt to be of great importance. He had lain so still, with his eyes closed, all this morning, that Maggie told her aunt Moss she must not expect her father to take any notice of them.

They entered very quietly, and Mrs. Moss took her seat near the head of the bed, while Maggie sat in her old place on the bed, and put her hand on her father's with-out causing any change in his face. Mr. Glegg and Tom had also entered, treading softly, and were busy selecting the key of the old oak chest from the bunch which Tom had brought from his father's bureau. They succeeded in opening the chest—which stood opposite the foot of Mr. Tulliver's bed—and propping the lid with the iron holder, without much noise.

"There's a tin box," whispered Mr. Glegg; "he'd most like put a small thing like a note in there. Lift it out, Tom; but I'll just lift up these deeds—they're the deeds o' the house and mill, I suppose—and see what there is under 'em."

Mr. Glegg had lifted out the parchments, and had fortunately drawn back a little, when the iron holder gave way, and the heavy lid fell with a loud bang that resounded over the house.

Perhaps there was something in that sound more than the mere fact of the strong vibration that produced the instantaneous effect on the frame of the prostrate man, and for the time completely shook off the obstruction of paralysis. The chest had belonged to his father and his father's father, and it had always been rather a solemn business to visit it. All long-known objects, even a mere window fastening or a particular door-latch, have sounds which are a sort of recognised voice to us—a voice that will thrill and awaken, when it has been used to touch deep-lying fibres. In the same moment when all the eyes in the room were turned upon him, he started up and looked at the chest, the parchments in Mr. Glegg's hand, and Tom holding the tin box, with a glance of perfect consciousness and recognition.

"What are you going to do with those deeds?" he said, in his ordinary tone of sharp questioning whenever he was irritated. "Come here, Tom. What do you do, going to my chest?"

Tom obeyed, with some trembling; it was the first time his father had recognised him. But instead of saying anything more to him, his father continued to look, with a growing distinctness of suspicion at Mr. Glegg and the deeds.

"What's been happening, Blake suggested the establishment of liquor stores under government control, where nothing but the best liquor would be sold. The important thing, he said, was to control the traffic. Compulsory prohibition would never be a success. At the evening sitting, Hon. N. W. Rowell, spoke at some length in support of the bill, declaring that no one piece of legislation had been received with so many expressions of approval. He asked the committee to consider what the situation in Winnipeg would be today were the bars open. Dealing with the matter of permanency, Mr. Rowell said that the government was releasing its pledge to the people by enacting the legislation for another year. During the next year, some of the provinces would express their opinions with regard to prohibition and this would have a bearing upon the situation.

After some further discussion, Mr. Cronyn's amendment was declared lost and the bill was reported on committee. It stands for third reading. Late on Thursday, May 22nd, the house adopted the report of the special committee, aiming to abolish titles. The vote came after a long debate, somewhat dragging at the outset, but winding up in exciting scenes. Early in the afternoon, Mr. Nicholson, of Algoma, had moved an amendment to refer the report back to committee with instructions to strike out all the paragraphs except the reference to hereditary titles.

There was considerable criticism during the debate that the report was too sweeping, and the final rejection of the amendment by 96 to 43 came somewhat as a surprise. There were six ministers of the government in the house, three, Sir Thomas White, Mr. Burrell and General McEwren voted for the amendment. Three, Messrs Carvell, Crerar and Rowell voted against it. On the opposition side of the house, one member only voted for the amendment—W. F. Kay, of Mississippi. Subsequent to rejection of the amendment, the resolution of concurrence in the committee's report was declared carried on division.

Mr. Tulliver, even between the fits of spasmodic rigidity which had recurred at intervals ever since he had been found fallen from his horse, was usually in so apathetic a condition that the exits and entrances into his room were not felt to be of great importance. He had lain so still, with his eyes closed, all this morning, that Maggie told her aunt Moss she must not expect her father to take any notice of them.

Then?" he said sharply. "What are you meddling with my deeds for? I waken lying hold of everything? Why don't you tell me what you've been a-doing?" he added impatiently, as Mr. Glegg advanced to the foot of the bed before speaking.

"No, no, friend Tulliver," said Mr. Glegg in a soothing tone. "Nobody's getting hold of anything as yet. We only came to look and see what was in the chest. You've been ill, you know, and we've had to look after things a bit. But let's hope you'll soon be well enough to attend to everything yourself."

Mr. Tulliver looked round him meditatively—at Tom, at Mr. Glegg and at Maggie; then suddenly appearing aware that someone was seated by his side at the head of the bed, he turned sharply round and saw his sister.

"Oh, Grizty!" he said, in the half-sad, affectionate tone in which he had been wont to speak to her. "What? you're there, are you? How could you manage to leave the children?"

"Oh, brother!" said good Mrs. Moss, too impulsive to be prudent, "I'm thankful I'm come now to see you yourself again—I thought you'd never know as any more."

"What have I had a stroke?" said Mr. Tulliver, anxiously, looking at Mr. Glegg.

"A fall from your horse—about you a bit—that's all, I think," said Mr. Glegg. "But you'll soon get over it, let's hope."

Italian Ship Foes.

Paris, May 27. — The Temps anticipates that the revision of the peace treaty which is to be offered the Austrian plenipotentiaries at St. Germain will be delayed for a few days. This will be due, the newspaper says, to the fact that the Italian government appears to have disposed to sanction the new Austrian Jugo-Slav frontier, so long as the question of the frontier between Italy and Jugo-Slavia remains undetermined.

SASKATOON STARTS STRIKE

SASKATOON, May 26. — At noon, tomorrow all unions in Saskatoon will cease work in sympathy with Winnipeg strikers. After a hotly debated the trades and labor council decided to strike. Those unions which look after public safety are to be allowed to remain at work. It is likely the press will be allowed to run.

This is Better Than Laxatives

One 100 Tablet Each Night For 30 Days Will Correct Your Constipation and Make Consequent Discomfort Vanish. Try It.

Your digestion and constitution mean a greatly increased life and low vitality. Your constitution needs cleaned, bowels, fermentation, putrefaction and the formation of poisonous gases which are absorbed by the blood and carried through the body. The result is weakness, headache, dizziness, coated tongue, heartburn, flatulent attacks, loss of energy, nervousness, poor appetite, impure blood, slow complexion, general ill-health, and often times actual disease.
