THE SURVIVOR SAVED.

See angels, sent on errands full of love! For on the heights and in the vale, And shall they languish, shall they die in vain?

In a retired but beautiful village, near the coast, lived a rich merchant, Mr. M., who had formerly been a rich merchant in one of our large cities, but the loss of most of his property, and of a wife who loved him, and endeavored to secure his future happiness, and he gladly retired with the only treasure left him, his sweet Mary, to the now congenial quiet of the country.

His affection for his wife was not less than his affection for his property, and he was ever ready to do for her what she desired. He was a kind and generous man, and he was ever ready to do for her what she desired.

One afternoon, as he was sitting at his desk, he was informed that a vessel had been wrecked on the coast, and that the only survivor was a young girl, who was said to be the daughter of a rich merchant.

He immediately started up, and he was ever ready to do for her what she desired. He was a kind and generous man, and he was ever ready to do for her what she desired.

SHORT PATENT SERMON.

My text (relating to the wife business) is included in these words: Then cherish her dearly, And love her sincerely; Be faithful, industrious and kind; Make not a night's finding; A pretext for railing; If you should happen to find.

Do not misuse her. And never wish her ill; When proper her wishes may be; And the cost care and trouble; Be kind, indulgent and true; By the kindness she'll lavish on thee.

My HEARSER, I am not speaking of horses, but I do intend to say that a wife is as nice a creature to work in double harness, if you use her properly, as a person need wish to drive. I must hold up. I didn't mean to drive but to possess, yes, the works well, if rightly conveyed, and the cost attending the preliminaries—and after the expenses so cheerfully defrayed. Consider these things, I say, and then think, if you can, that she is not worth preserving and protecting as a pearl of price. You take her for better or for worse, just as you buy a colt. If she proves better, you have reason to rejoice; but if she turns out to be worse, you must consider a your misfortune, and bear the burden as well as you can. The predicament was no fault of hers—she didn't ask you to take her; but you popped the question, and she replied: "Here, Sir, you see, you are bound to cherish her, in any circumstances, let her be good or bad—a direct descendant of the devil, or a legitimate offspring of Heaven.

My dear friends—after you have got a wife, see that you continue to love her sincerely; as sincerely, if not as warmly, as when you first breathed into her the sentiments of your heart. Cling to her with all the tenacity of a hop-vine—and when the tempest winds of trouble blow along fighter still, like a cork to a limb in a hurricane. You must love her, and love each other, if you would keep fresh and bright the fairest of gems in the longest of combinal bliss, and see springing in your bosom beds of domestic joy. But I know how it is with you young husbands—your love is too apt to be first—then the liquor grows cool by degrees; and sometimes it gets so low in temperature, that if a thermometer were introduced, I think it wouldn't stand a great way from freezing point. You walk into the matrimonial Eden, and imagine that double blessed joys, and indiarubber pleasures are forever to attend you; but directly you fall off of the fruit—fill yourselves almost to a surfeit—and then say in your inward: "This place is not near as good as I thought it was. I don't know but what I would as soon be out as in, and a little sooner." Oh, you easily duped victims of disappointment, you must not raise your anticipations of conjugal felicity to quite so high a pitch—Bring them to a little lower standard, and you will be as much surprised at the frequent occurrences and comforts attending thereby, as I was at the enjoyment of a turtle soup party the other day at my friend's, the Messrs. Burnham,—on the Bloomingdale road, about three miles beyond Col. Thompson's, a quarter of a mile beyond Mr. Griffin's, half a mile side of Col. Stuckman's (Sticker's Bay) and within a mile of Captain Truesdell's, (Albany Hotel). It is a good thing to be particular in pointing out locations from a pulpit.

My HEARSER, be faithful to the wife; pay her all the attentions you possibly can. Don't fiddle about among other wives; because if you do, you will stand a chance, like my friend Gen. Scott, of the other in the rear. Be at home evenings, at all times, when she has a proper right to expect you; be kind and indulgent to her as you value hers and your happiness; for if foolishly oppose a woman in your ways, you face an energetic and energetic tornado. You must not take advantage of any slight falling of her nature; but if you find a flaw, instead of making the crack wider by picking and pinching, you must cover it all over with the soft, soothing and pliant plaster of patience—and you will find that it is her disposition to money rather than to make herself. Oh, do not, I beseech you, my dear friends, ever misuse your better halves. They were never fashioned nor built with sufficient strength to stand abuse; but rather to be cherished and protected, like hot house plants as they are—screened from the frosts and sheltered from the stormy winds of the world. Never refuse them any wish within the limits of your circumstances—give them a kiss when you feel a disposition to kick—do all in your power to please them—and no matter what the cost, care and trouble may amount to, they will repay you with compound kindness, and gaily look after the little responsibilities attendant upon the matrimonial state. So may it be—Dios, Jax.

STRENGTH OF THE HUMAN FRAME.—One of the most remarkable and inexplicable experiments relative to the strength of the human frame is that which a heavy weight may be raised with the greatest facility when he is lifted up the instant that his own lungs and those of the persons who raise him are inflated with air. The heaviest person in the party lies down upon two chairs, his legs being supported by one and his back by the other. Four persons, one on each leg and one on each shoulder, then try to raise him and find his weight to be very great, but the difficulty they experienced in supporting him. When he is replaced in the chair each of the four persons takes hold of his body as before, and the person to be lifted gives two signals by blowing his hands. At the first signal, he himself and his four carriers begin to draw a long full breath, and when the inhalation is completed, or the lungs filled, the second signal is given for raising the person from the chair. To his own surprise, and that of his bearers, he rises with the greatest facility, as if he were no heavier than a feather. Sometimes, when one of the bearers performs his part ill, by making the inhaling out of time, the part of the body which he tries to raise is left behind. The experiment was performed at Venice by sustaining the heaviest man in the party on the points of the fingers of four persons. It is stated that the experiment will not succeed if the person lifted be placed on a board; and the strength of the individuals applied to the board.

Abridgement of Sir D. Truster's Natural Magic. In 1700, wine was sold in a cask, by apportioning it, and in 1681, licences were granted for its sale.
