A MURDERER'S NOSE.

the strains of the talented orchestra, my no longer mysterious but now dreadful acquaintance, Mr. George Griffiths!

My duty, I decided after a moment's reflection, was plain—to denounce and deliver him to the authorities.

Quickly, therefore, lest he should leave before I could have him arrested, I explained myself as well as I was able to the nearest official. He looked, and was, unbelieving. So, too, were the others whom he summoned to hear my story. That part of it which referred to the operation was received with a smile; and the upshot of it was that so far from effecting my expatient's capture I was myself lightly ridiculed as a mad Englishman.

But I considered my clear duty, viz., to deliver a foul murderer up to justice. I determined, therefore, to renew my acquaintance with him there and then, to give him no inkling of my knowledge of the truth, and to communicate, once more with the English police while continuing to keep him under my own surveillance in the Saxon capital.

bim under my own surveillance in the Saxon capital.

When, with a polite bow, I approached and spoke to him, he recognized me at once; I could see that, though at first he pretended not to know me. We had a glass of beer together, and spoke of many matters of general interest, I flattering myself that nothing in my conversation or bearing gave him the slighest ground to suspect me.

That same night I wrpte a long letter to the London police, again stating my certain knowledge that this man, changed though he was, was the murderer of Mrs.

the doctor as he sat and looked with innite satisfaction upon the result of his strange adventure.

"Royal mummy, is it? he grunted to himself as he perched the sarcophagus on its pedal end. "Well then, royal mummy it shall be. I'll get an inscription made, put it up the chimney to blacken, and then trot it out as proof infallible of my contention. Ah! I can see the gleam of joy which will light up the faces of my learned friends when they behold this fine specimen of ancient art and ancient corruption."

The doctor had a pleasant dream, and he then made out a blank cheque for £500. This, surely, was only a small price for a rayal mummy, and he was sure his friends would be only too glad to pay it.

But this pleasant dream was destined to a rude awakening. He took his passage tor the homeward trip, and had the mummy tenderly stowed away in his berth. It was not particularly pleasant to have a corpse sleeping in the same room with him, but he was comforted by the thought that it had been a corpse so long that its powers for working mischief must be reduced to a minimum.
