Directors' Goal.

The lifelong ambition of Mr. Darnell, the goal ever in the distance, was to become Prime Minister of England with a staunch majority of partisans at his back. This goal he has now reached for the first time. When he was Premier he held office only on sufferance—only while he was carrying out the policy of his opponents rather than the policy of his own party. He reached office more by the dissensions of his enemies than the strength of his friends. Now he has the proud consciousness of taking office in accordance with the expressed wishes of a majority of the people. His party is compact and numerous fifty more than all other parties combined. His opponents are divided into factions, and cannot be combined in support of any particular measure. The majority of fifty, therefore, though small in a House of six hundred, is a small one in a House of six hundred, and is large enough to enable the Minister to rule firmly, without asking favor from a single opponent. This is the opportunity so eagerly longed for, so bravely fought for, by this strange man of genius, and the triumph of his life. Can he hold his majority together against the assaults of his foes, and the dissensions of his followers? Can he so rule England that love and trust of him, rather than dislike and fear of the Liberals, will enable him to win the next contest of the polls? Will he succeed in carrying forward the necessary reforms desired by the more advanced of his supporters, and satisfactory to the more moderate of his opponents without alienating his extreme Tory adherents—will he satisfy the great public sentiment that demands reform of some kind without alienating the fears of those who dread change?

It is fashionable, particularly in the United States, to regard Mr. Darnell as an extreme radical at heart, and to believe that he is laughing at his aristocratic followers while he talks of preserving their privileges from his enemies. Mr. Darnell has the power, say the correspondents of New York papers and many others, "he will institute reforms more radical than Gladstone and Bright, or even Bradlaugh and Dilke ever dreamed of." This belief is fashionable, and consequently, many profess it, and find support for it in the fact that Mr. Darnell is the ablest chief of the great Conservative party. We have never accepted this theory, and do not accept it now. A man can hardly profess a doctrine for a generation without believing in it himself, or not following without being his own dupes. Mr. Darnell has the life that he is merely a clever actor on the political stage—a shrewd and a radical. He saw that change in the suffrage was inevitable, and instead of using power for the purpose of retarding it a year or two, wisely determined to effect it himself. He went further than the reformers themselves had intended going, because he could thereby reach a class that he considered favorable to his own party. Darnell might have done all he did, being a shrewd politician, consistently with the narrowest Toryism, and what he did is no basis for the expectation that he will adopt a radical policy now.

The election in Buckinghamshire took place Friday. The Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli and Sir R. Harvey, Conservatives, were returned. Mr. Darnell received 2,999 votes, and Sir Harvey 2,992. The defeated Liberal candidate received 1,720 votes.

A Financial Harlequin.

Wendell Phillips leaps into the arena of financial discussion with a wild profusion of defiance toward all the settled principles of the subject he tackles, and with an air of utter unconsciousness of his absurdities, which remind us, in many ways, of the usual first entrance of the traditional clown into the circus ring. "Hoop la" says one of the philosophers "Call in your greenbacks, and set the printing press to work. Issue $1,000,000,000 of currency—there are plenty of presses—and scatter it by the simple process of lending to all who want to borrow. Then neither the Bank of England, nor any flag, there or here, could disturb our currency by a corner in gold or greenbacks." Money will be given in gold or greenbacks, and will be given at the cheerful rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, and we can even get along without the greatest of blessings, a protective tariff.

What a delightful solution of all our financial ills! How simple the process of enriching the nation! What a consolation it must afford to the desperate spirits of the much maligned John Law to know that he has a successor in Massachusetts who is so entirely uninfected by the restraints of common sense and experience—N. Y. Mail.

Will Life in the Far West.

A volume bearing the above title has just been issued by a Hartford publishing house. The book gives numerous incidents and details of life in the Far West in years past, when civilization had not reached still less on the home of the Indian. The author, Capt. James Hobbs, has lived among the Comanches and knows whereof he writes. The identity of the hero of the stirring scenes of the book, with the author, is vouchsafed by Mr. Wm. E. Goodyear, a well known citizen. The book is profusely illustrated, and is a very interesting volume to a large class of readers, and much more valuable than the stories of adventures upon which the public are fed.—N. Y. Palladium.

Miss Kate Stanton will lecture Saturday night in the Academy of Music. She will deliver her loveable lecture on "The Loves of Great Men." The lecture is on the loves of women for great men, dealing with Heloise, Chloëptra, and other lovely and top-heavy historical dames. Miss Stanton's views are original, and her manner charming.

CONCEALING SPAIN.

The Curling Contest—Pete's Victories.

The match game to hold the Lake yesterday, between the Curling Club of this city, and St. Andrew's Club of this city, was a splendid contest. Both clubs, from the beginning of the game, seemed determined to do the level best, and it was only one point difference between the two. After sandwiches, etc., the play was continued. Detailed arrangements had been made by the St. Andrew's Club with Mr. Red-wards of the Victoria Hotel for the entertainment of their guests. Mr. John K. Kelly had charge of the catering department on the ice, and said to the visitors: "We'll give you a drink, food you, and, if necessary, provide a safe of clothes to send you home happy."

The refreshments were dispensed under an improvised tent, made of an old sail, and decorated with flags. As might be expected, this was one of the attractions of the lake.

In the afternoon, a large number of ladies and gentlemen went out to see the play, and some went in sleighs, some on sleds, and others walked. Five rinks were playing, and the spectators moved from rink to rink only to get a better view of the play. The rink leading to the Victoria Hotel was the most attractive one to the majority of the spectators. Every-thing said to-night should have been there to secure a picture of the scene. During the afternoon, the curling clubs were all present to all that they were bound to win. They all played most carefully, not missing a shot if possible. The St. Andrew's club played very poorly. The visitors showed skill and careful practice. There was one shot played which must be noticed, as it is a point none of the players had ever seen made. One Pictou stone laid on the ice, while the stones of St. John were crowded in on all sides, when Ship James Higgins by a brilliant shot knocked out the Pictou stone, and counted eight for his side. Then the roaring would have done justice to a cage of lions, for the biggest possible noise had been made. The contest closed, the score being as follows:
